Supermarket and hotel in talks to take over plot on cinema site

By Chris Britcher
 chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

OWNERS of the cinema site say they are in "advanced discussions" with a supermarket and hotel to move on to the plot, as they seek to allay fears plans for the town's number one grot spot have stalled.

With Morrisons, near the railway station, re-opening earlier this week after years of being left abandoned, MP Greg Clark took the opportunity to call on those behind the cinema site to not delay and remove one of the town's longest running eye-sores.

The MP said: "Word should go out to the owners of the cinema site as to how forceful people power in Tunbridge Wells can be.

"We are all fed up with years of dereliction on this site – it is a real eye-sore – and the time has come for the new owners to make progress and to work with the public rather than behind closed doors.

"People in Tunbridge Wells were outraged that Morrisons had kept its prime site boarded-up over the last five years, blighting the town."

The Carlyle Group and Bellhouse Joseph, joint owners of the cinema site on Mount Pleasant Road, said they hope to submit a planning application for a mixed-use scheme over the summer.

Work is currently progressing in preparation for the demolition process to begin, and on Monday a number of companies were asked to submit formal tenders for the work by mid-May.

Council chiefs gave the nod for permission to pull down the former buildings in November last year.

Edward Bellhouse, of Bellhouse Joseph, said: "Although there may have been little visible sign of progress, there has in fact been a great deal of work going on behind the scenes since we acquired the site six months ago. "This has included regular discussions with the council, which is as keen as we are to see that the site can be brought back into use.

OLD CINEMA SITE

"We have undertaken a detailed and time-consuming study of the site that has enabled us to understand the critical issues and how to manage constraints such as the rail tunnel underneath while at the same time meeting the needs of potential occupiers. We are now able to move forward with considerable confidence."

Ben Du Boulay, director at the Carlyle Group, added: "We believe strongly in the potential of this site, and are in advanced discussions with a number of possible occupiers including a supermarket and a hotel.

"I have been encouraged by the level of demand, and I am confident we will be able to attract a strong roster of tenants to the development.

"We are fully committed to getting this project under way as soon as possible and have made good progress in the six months that we have owned the site. We look forward to submitting our full plans over the summer.

"Before that happens we will be seeking feedback on our proposals from local residents, statutory bodies and a range of other interested parties."

But one grot spot was no more this week as Morrisons returned.

The site had stood empty since 2006, when the supermarket chain opted to move out of the town.

But political pressure began to grow when it became apparent Morrisons was blocking a bid by rival firm Waitrose to take over the site.

Following the intervention of MP Greg Clark and the council – along with a campaign launched on social networking websites by fuming residents – Morrisons agreed to return to the town.

And after making the announcement last September, it opened up the doors of its new store on Monday.

The new branch is believed to have created more than 200 jobs for the town.

Conservative MP Mr Clark said: "I want to thank the whole community for campaigning so hard to get the store re-opened.

"Particular credit must go to the local Tunbridge Wells Twitter and Facebook users, and to councillors who gathered signatures from more than 4,000 households in central Tunbridge Wells. It just goes to show how much can be achieved when a community works together.

"It is important that Morrisons recognises it is part of the town centre community and that a successful town centre is in everyone's interests."

CARE

Residents put their best foot forward to raise cash for entertainments fund

By James Benjamin

tw@kosmedia.co.uk

SOME of Tunbridge Wells' older residents braved the recent cold weather to take part in a sponsored walk across the Common, raising almost £200 for charity.

Staff and friends of not-for-profit Mount Ephraim House accompanied residents Mary Sherman and Ken Beer, both of whom are over 80.

Also taking part were their neighbours from retirement home Chartwell Lodge in Bishops Down Road, led by Vivienne Sharp.

Mount Ephraim House is run by Greensleeves Homes Trust, a not-for-profit charitable organisation providing residential care. Sponsored walks took place simultaneously at the trusts' other 16 homes around the country.

Marilyn Bridger, activities co-ordinator at Mount Ephraim House, said: "We were lucky to have bright sunshine on the day but it was too cold for a lot of our residents – next time they would like a walk to be organised for the summer.

Everyone was very pleased to return home to a warm welcome and a cup of tea."

Mount Ephraim House is accredited by the Eden Alternative, which promotes quality of life in care homes, aiming to eliminate loneliness, helplessness and boredom.

Mount Ephraim's manager Karen

Cooper said: "All of the money raised will go towards our amenity fund which is used solely to provide residents with stimulating activities – something we feel is incredibly important. We've recently purchased a large amount of new craft products and we have trips planned to the seaside, local beauty spots, art galleries and tea at the Pantiles.

"We are also going to introduce Tai Chi, additional pampering sessions and purchase more films and music. We feel that keeping residents active and happy is essential to their well-being so the amenity fund is very important to us.

"We are very grateful to everyone who has helped us to raise almost £200 so far."

Only blue skies ahead – Kaddy reveals reasons behind quitting BBC

By Chris Britcher

chris.britcher@archant.co.uk

KADDY Lee-Preston has revealed the reasons behind her shock departure from the BBC – admitting being dropped from presenting regional magazine show Inside Out convinced her it was time to move on.

And she revealed her cheeky presenting style, loved by viewers, often upset straight-laced BBC bosses.

The bubbly weather presenter stunned viewers when she announced she was quitting three weeks ago. It brought the curtain down on an 11-year career on weekday news programme BBC South East Today and its morning and evening bulletins.

Speaking to Kent on Sunday this week from her home in Tunbridge Wells, Miss Lee-Preston, 35, said she accepted a voluntary redundancy package after further huge cuts at the BBC's local studios.

She explained: "Weather's budget had been cut by 50 per cent and voluntary redundancy seemed like the perfect time for me to go and spread my wings. I'd been thinking about a move.

"As soon as I stopped doing Inside Out and it changed direction and the presenter, I was then put on the early shift – and I can tell you I am not good in the mornings – and it was not the way I wanted my career to be going.

"Inside Out was amazing and I loved it. The mix of that and weather was great. So when they took Inside Out away I reassessed my position.

"So it played a big part."

In a move which surprised many, Miss Lee-Preston was dropped from the show and replaced by newsreader Natalie Graham.

Miss Lee-Preston added: "It was a surprise in one sense, but I'd done it for five or six years which was quite a long time.

"I couldn't have chosen a better person than Natalie. That made it easier."

Now going freelance, the popular presenter says she is holding a number of talks with production companies about presenting roles and programme ideas, splitting her time in Kent with jaunts to London.

She also has plans to do more charity work.

She explained: "People said I was mad to leave such a great job, and there may have been a one per cent doubt, but 99 per cent was pure excitement that this was the right time to move on.

"What I'm finding now, and what I hoped would happen, is there aren't enough hours in the day to do the things I want to do now I've left.

"I had a lot of fun at the BBC, but since then my diary is full with worthwhile things and a sense of a new path to take.

"Sometimes my style didn't suit the straight nature of the BBC – my style being a little bit cheeky with my broadcasts, and that didn't always go down well.

"I think overall I caused them a lot of bother and my misbehaving got my boss down a little bit.

"But I have no regrets. I loved it."

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Town hall in mourning

THE leader of Tonbridge and Malling Borough Council – Cllr Mark Worrall – died on Thursday morning. The father-of-three had been admitted to hospital last week suffering from an illness.

Cllr Worrall, 58, who represented West Malling and Leybourne, was first elected to the council in May, 1982. He was elected leader of the Tory group in 1985 and remained leader until his death. He was leader of the council from 1985-95 and again from 2003 to his death.

➔ No end to hosepipe ban

DESPITE heavy downpours across the county this week the hosepipe ban will remain in place.

Southern Water, one of five companies serving the county, said Kent would need need a lot more rain over a long period of time to replenish resources.

The hosepipe ban came into effect on April 5, after the worst drought for 30 years. Anyone caught breaking the water restrictions could face a £1,000 fine.

➔ Sir Brandon Gough dies

SIR Brandon Gough, a Deputy Lieutenant of Kent, who took on several other high-profile roles in the county, has died suddenly aged 74 on Thursday. Sir Brandon was also chairman of Locate in Kent, chairman of Leeds Castle Foundation, and a trustee of Canterbury Cathedral as well as being patron of Rochester Cathedral's Business Guild.

He was knighted in the New Years Honours of 2002 for his public service. Born on Merseyside in 1937, Sir Brandon was married with three

COURT

FOOTAGE of a man filling up a garden sprayer with petrol just 45 minutes before a nearby house went up in flames – killing three people – has been shown to a court.

Dramatic images of the moment crews from Kent Fire and Rescue Service arrived at the fatal blaze in Chatham were also played at the trial into the deaths of Melissa Crook, 20, her son 15-month-old Noah, and her father Mark, 48.

Melissa's ex-husband used car salesman

Danai Muhammadi, 24, his girlfriend, unemployed Emma Smith, 21, and Maidstone doorman Farhad Mahmud, 35, are each charged with three counts of murder.

They are also charged with the attempted murders of Melissa's brother Bohdan, 21, and her mum Amanda, who both escaped the fire at the property in Chatham Hill in Chatham in the early hours of September 10, 2011.

Smith, of Barley Lea, Stoke Aldermoor, Coventry, faces an additional charge of conspiracy to commit arson with intent to endanger life.

All three defendants deny the charges.

During the trial at Maidstone Crown Court, footage of a man – said by the prosecution team to be Muhammadi – filling up a petrol can and garden sprayer at a nearby garage was shown to jurors.

The footage was captured at 1.43am on September 10, last year at the Texaco garage in Maidstone Road in Chatham. Crews were called to the fatal blaze just after 2.30am.

A video of fire crews arriving to the scene showed the property engulfed in flames. It took firefighters three minutes to arrive.

As part of the evidence, an audio recording of Smith calling the fire service was played. She said: "Me and my boyfriend have just gone past a house and it's on fire, it's burning down. I don't know the address but it's Chatham Hill, Chatham in Kent."

Prosecutors claim Muhammadi, of Britannia Street, Coventry, and Mahmud, of Kensington House, Fernhill Road, Maidstone, encouraged by Smith, sprayed petrol through the letterbox of the Crook's home and set it alight.

Muhammadi and Melissa married in Rochester in 2010, and moved to Coventry. The pair split up a few months later and she moved back in with her family in Kent with their son Noah.

The trial continues.

Riot compensation bids dismissed – as there was no disorder

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

KENT Police say six people who tried to claim compensation for damage to their premises during the violent riots last summer have failed – because there were no riots in Kent.

To make a claim under the Riots (Damages) Act, official riot status needs to have been declared by the authorities.

Then anyone inside that zone affected by the people involved in the disturbance may be able to claim compensation they suffered as a direct result of the unrest.

But although some parts of the county did experience violent incidents, while other parts of the country were burning, actual riot status in the county was never declared.

It seems people around the country felt it was a good chance to cash in on the August 6-10 riots in London by claiming youths in their area were causing riot damage, and put in claims.

The phantom claims appeared from counties including Lincolnshire, Cheshire and Northumbria, as well as the half dozen in Kent.

A spokesman for the force said: "Kent Police received six claims for compensation against the Kent Police Authority submitted under the provisions of the Riot (Damages) Act 1886.

"None have been settled or are pending since there were no riots declared in Kent during the summer of 2011.

"Any incidents occurring in Kent were deemed violent disorder, theft and criminal damage and therefore did not fall within the provisions of the 1886 Act."

The issue of bogus claims came up during a House of Lords debate by Lord Henley where some were described as "overgenerous".

In Chatham and Gillingham there were at least 11 arrests following disturbances, and rumours were rife online that a major riot in the Medway towns was being plotted. It never happened.

Fires were started in Dartford and there was an arrest in Margate of a man suspected of inciting a riot.

Two 18-year-olds were arrested in Folkestone for allegedly using social networking sites to encourage people to join in a riot.

Other minor incidents included criminal damage to cars in Wilmington and Dartford. A motorbike was damaged at a supermarket in Maidstone where youths knocked the bike over. There was minor criminal damage to a bus in Herne Bay high street, and damage to a window in Whitstable.

Petrol stations were advised not to sell fuel in cans, and Bluewater security was beefed up.

At the time, Deputy Chief Constable Alan Pughley said: "Kent Police will continue to challenge any hint of disorder or criminal behaviour", and he added they were working hard to keep the county "safe".

The fatal shooting of 29-year-old Mark Dugan by Met Police officers in Tottenham, north London, was the catalyst for the riots.

Kent Police sent some officers to London to support their Met colleagues when the disturbances first broke out.

HEALTH

Claims of hospital A&E downgrade dismissed as 'nonsense' by NHS

HEALTH chiefs have denied claims they are planning to downgrade accident and emergency services, branding it "utter nonsense".

It follows the launch of a campaign by activists accusing East Kent Hospitals University NHS Foundation Trust of seeking to reduce major trauma services at the Queen Elizabeth Queen Mother (QEQM) Hospital in Margate.

They claim hospital bosses are planning to transfer major trauma services from Margate to the William Harvey Hospital in Ashford, meaning seriously injured or sick patients would have to travel 30 miles to receive emergency treatment.

But the NHS argued that the majority of such patients were not treated in Margate anyway and were currently sent to hospitals in London.

A spokesman for the hospital trust said: "Kent Trauma Unit is looking to open three specialist units in Kent; at the William Harvey, Medway Maritime, and Pembury. This will make it better for trauma patients as instead of having to travel all the way to London they can go to places in Kent.

"This does not mean services in Margate will be reduced. It's nonsense. We don't have all specialist services in Margate. You can't have every specialist unit in every hospital. For example, there is a specialist robot used to operate on prostate cancer in Canterbury and a specialist heart unit in Margate, and so patients travel to either hospital when needed.

"Taking patients to a major trauma unit in Ashford will mean they won't have to go all the way to London. This is a good thing."

But campaigners said they believe the changes could lead to a downgrading of services.

Thanet district councillor Ian Driver said there was massive support for local accident and emergency services.

"I can't see how the long journey to Ashford will save lives," he said.

"Campaigners are planning to hold public meetings over the next few weeks to discuss the plans.

"This will impact on every man, woman and child in Thanet."

Protesters said they are meeting with the hospital trust's chief executive Stuart Bain to discuss the plans in greater detail.

A public consultation on the plans is due to take place later this year.

More than 5,000 people have joined a Facebook group calling for the services to be saved.

Almost a quarter of those surveyed (23 per cent) thought the proposed change was a terrible idea that would increase road traffic accidents.

PLANS for Hadlow College Community Free School have passed another government hurdle and will now be considered in more detail by the Department for Education next month.

The proposed new school, which would open in September, 2013, would be free of council control and would offer pupils aged 11-16 a "rural ethos".

It would be built within the campus of Hadlow College, close to Tonbridge.

DEATH

Classmates mourning after pupil dies during school rounders game

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

TRIBUTES have been pouring in for tragic schoolgirl Nicky Payne who collapsed while playing rounders and later died.

The 15-year-old was playing at Angley School in Cranbrook when she collapsed.

She was rushed by ambulance to the William Harvey hospital in Ashford, where she was pronounced dead despite attempts to resuscitate her.

The sudden death of the happy teenager has shocked friends and family, and other students at the sports school.

The alarm was raised at about 11.30am on Tuesday, when Nicola suddenly slumped to the ground during a rounders game.

Until a post-mortem has been completed the police say they are treating the death as 'unexplained', but stress it is not being treated as suspicious and no-one is being sought.

Angley executive headteacher Debbie Coslett said: "Everyone at the school is extremely shocked and saddened by Nicky's death.

"Our thoughts and deepest sympathies are with her family and friends at this very difficult time. Nicky played a full part in the life of the school and was the first to volunteer for any activity. She especially loved taking part in school shows.

"It will take time for all those who knew her to come to terms with what has happened.

"We will be offering support to her friends, all students and staff at the school. Educational psychologists will also be in school to support wherever necessary."

Pupils at the school were told of the tragedy during an assembly later the same day.

On a special Facebook remembrance page, Carolyn Asplin wrote: "RIP Nicola and thinking of all your family and friends at this very sad time."

And Anita Goacher said: "Goodnight Princess, sleep right." Naataalie Jayy Smith said: "Goodnight Nicola may you rest in peace! You will never be forgotten."

Paul Blunt said: "My daughter has been telling me stories of her – made her laugh and stood up to people who bullied her. Tammy said going to miss her."

And Liza Homewood wrote: "Such sad news my thoughts are with her lovely family. Nicola will be greatly missed."

TRADEGY:

Friends of Nicky Payne, who died on Tuesday, have been leaving their tributes on a special Facebook page created for the pupil of Angley School and singer", and Rhys Vausden, 15, added she was always "happy, lively, and cheerful. Everyone was in shock. No-one could believe it."

Kent Police said: "We were called to Angley School in Cranbrook after a 15-year-old girl collapsed during a game of rounders.

"The girl, Nicky Payne, was taken to William Harvey Hospital in Ashford, but hospital staff were unable to revive her.

"The death is being treated as unexplained, but there are not currently thought to be any suspicious circumstances. Nicky's family are being supported by a family liaison officer from Kent Police and the coroner has been notified."

An investigation is still being conducted and an inquest is likely to be held at some stage because of the circumstances of the death, but this has not yet been finally decided.

Families' French pilgrimage to opening of tribute to 'lost' soldiers who died in Battle of the Somme

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE poignant stories of Kent soldiers who died in the bloodiest battle in the history of the British Army, but whose bodies have never been found, are among those told at a new exhibition.

Many of the dead from the World War One trenches have no graves as casualties were blown apart by shells, buried by massive explosions, or drowned in flooded shell holes.

The names of 72,000 of them are commemorated on a giant memorial at Thiepval in France – built 80 years ago.

The Missing of the Somme is the title of a display which is being held at the Historial de la Grande Guerre museum in the town of Peronne, France. Relatives of some of the Kent troops last week attended the opening of the exhibition, which runs until November 25.

Brian Ledger, from Headcorn, has been researching the story of his great uncle Bernard Lampard from Lenham, who died aged 28, after being hit by a shell near Skyline Trench on August 13, 1916, during the Battle of the Somme.

"I am very proud of him and seeing where he fought has been very emotional," said Mr Ledger. "The landscape may have changed, but I can picture how it must have been.

"According to the accounts I have uncovered, his last wish was for a gold ring to be sent back to England – but where that is now I don't know.

"I found out a lot about him from letters which had been sent by one of his comrades, and to honour his memory I intend to cycle from my home to the scene of the battle, following the route he took to the front. There is always a ceremony to commemorate the start of the battle on July 1 and I intend to be there."

Sarah Duncan is grand-daughter of Rupert Inglis an Army chaplain who was, prior to joining up, rector of Frittenden, near Staplehurst.

He was also an England rugby international who played three matches for his country.

Ms Duncan said: "He was told he was too old to join up by his bishop, but he said that if his parishioners were fighting he must experience

FORGOTTEN SONS:

what they are going through.

"He died aged 54, and although his body was buried, the ground under which he lay was fought over again and the grave lost.

"He was Chaplain to the Forces, but volunteered as a stretcher bearer. During fighting he was trying to bring back wounded soldiers when he was struck by a shell fragment. He was in the process of having that wound attended to when he was hit by a second shell and killed.

"He wasn't really talked about by family members, maybe they kept it all bottled up. But now a photograph of him forms the centrepiece of the official exhibition poster – a real honour."

Other soldiers honoured include Norman Wood, whose family are from Dunton Green, a footballer who played for Chelsea and Spurs; and James Blown, a fisherman from Deal who died the day after he helped bury a comrade from the same town.

The exhibition was the idea of Ken and Pam Linge who started off by researching the stories of people from their own Northumberland village.

"These men may be missing, but they should never be forgotten," said Mrs Linge.

Funnyman is cooking up a comedy storm with his curry stage show

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE former One Show reporter and ace Indian cook Hardeep Singh Kohli is bringing his new show of comedy and curries to the county.

The comedian and TV celebrity said he had been a keen cook since the age of 10, and decided it would be a great platform for an improvised live comedy show.

He said: "It is done as a sort of challenge. We order a meal from a local Indian takeaway and while it is on its way I cook live on stage the same meal, and then we compare to see how I have done."

"In between is a great time to have a chat and tell some stories. It tends to be made up as we go along, so no two shows will be exactly the same."

But Kohli, 43, said he is not out to put down any local restaurants. It will simply be a comparison exercise.

He said: "The British have a love affair with Indian food. I don't know any other country in the world that loves it as much as us, and we all have our own ideas on what is best and how best to prepare it."

"The country is obsessed with curry and I want people to see how it can be done at home. My recipes were inspired by my mum and no-one can do it as well as she can, not even me."

At the beginning of each show

HOT STUFF: Hardeep Singh Kohli will cook a curry on stage

Kohli, who grew up in Glasgow, will order a takeaway for delivery to the venue, having selected a local Indian takeaway from audience suggestions submitted via HardeepLive.com.

He will order an audience member's favourite meal, and while waiting for it to arrive Kohli cooks his own food.

He said: "We have had Indian food here for about 50 years and now people want to go a little bit deeper and I aim to show that restaurant food is great, but there is a whole new world where they can do it at home."

In fact he is such a fan of taking this food to the masses that Indian Takeaway is the third incarnation of the show in various guises over the past two years, following The Nearly Naked Chef and Chat Masala.

Kohli was a runner-up on the first series of Celebrity Masterchef which led to two series for UKTV Food: New British Kitchen, and Chefs and the City.

His first book, Indian Takeaway, was nominated for an Independent Book Award, and he added: "All the recipes I will be using on stage will be in a book to be released soon to show how easy it can be."

"There are so many funny stories around this food, so it will be an evening of fun, too."

"I worked as a waiter and manager since my teenage years, but I have never cooked professionally. I didn't learn to cook for the shows – I have been cooking since I was 10, so this is all coming naturally."

He will be cooking at Tonbridge School, Tonbridge, on Friday, May, 4, call 01732 304241; and Woodville Halls, Gravesend, on Sunday, May 25, call 01474 33 77 74.

HERITAGE

£12m centre to protect our precious historical records

By Marijke Cox

A NEW state-of-the-art history and library centre boasting 14km of precious historic material dating back hundreds of years has opened its doors to the public.

And in a nod to some of history's greats, the grand opening of Kent's History and Library Centre coincided with Shakespeare's birthday and St George's Day.

The new library and archives facility in Maidstone replaces the existing services currently offered at the Centre for Kentish Studies, East Kent Archives Centre, and St Faith's libraries.

Among its treasures are letters by Jane Austen and one from Lord Nelson, as well as a charter dating from AD699 from the King of Kent granting tax relief to a monastery.

Kent County Council cabinet member for customer and communities Cllr Mike Hill, who officially opened the building, said it was an important milestone.

MODERN:

Tens of thousands of books and kilometres of records are stored at the centre, which also offers internet facilities

He added: "Not only is the building purpose-built, it is bright and welcoming and will have plenty on offer."

The centre in James Whatman Way, which cost £12m to build, will allow for precious archives to be kept in conditions to ensure their survival.

A KCC spokesman said: "Kent has a wealth of photographs and records, but to make sure they survive they need to be kept in carefully controlled conditions."

"The new centre has been purpose-built to protect and display many more archives than have ever been available to the public, it will be the place to come for anyone interested in local history."

The library section of the building offers 40,000 books and the children's library will host regular storytime sessions. There will also be author events, reading groups and community activities, as well as free internet access and wi fi.

More than 1,000 people attended the opening on Monday, which included an exhibition of archive treasures, films and readings of Shakespeare by costumed staff.

The Kent Cultural Baton – a mobile artwork travelling the county in the lead up to London 2012 – was also on hand.

ANIMAL WELFARE

Rise in animal cruelty cases leaves RSPCA facing 'crisis'

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

ANIMAL cruelty is at "crisis" point in the county, according to the latest figures from the RSPCA.

Officials have been left shocked at levels of neglect, leaving legal action the only course left open to the animal welfare charity.

It has compiled annual cruelty figures as the economic climate continues to bite, forcing some owners to leave their pets to suffer intolerable pain and anxiety.

Overall, the number of people convicted for animal cruelty rose by nearly a quarter in England and Wales last year.

And in Kent last year, some 148 people were reported to the RSPCA for allegedly causing cruelty. Officials obtained convictions in 49 cases.

That is more convictions under the Animals Welfare Act than East and West Sussex and Essex added together. Only greater London had more convictions – 61 from 113 reports.

Convictions have risen over two per cent, and disqualifications from keeping animals have soared 17 per cent in Kent and the South East.

Cruelty to dogs went up 37 per cent, and 85 per cent more defendants went to prison.

RSPCA chief executive Gavin Grant said: "The RSPCA faces a crisis that is stretching us to breaking point.

"We show zero tolerance to animal abusers. Anyone causing animals pain for profit or pleasure will be tracked down and prosecuted.

"We need the courts and councils, police and people who care, to join us in standing up and getting justice for Britain's abused animals."

South East regional manager Sally Bruce said: "We work closely with governmental and other charitable organisations, but we are the main organisation which prosecutes those who abuse animals and which can prevent cruelty to animals.

"We can't do this without the help and support of the public and we need it now more than ever."

In Welling in January, 2011, a man caught on camera kicking his dog was sentenced to eight weeks in prison and banned from keeping animals for five years.

He was filmed kicking his dog, Sparkie, and pulling him into the air by his lead in Knee Hill Park, near Woolwich, in October, 2010.

WILDLIFE

Dormice settlers prove pioneering land-bridge is the perfect link between man and mammal

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE ingenious camouflaging of a bridge to fit in with its rural surroundings has been so convincing a family of rare dormice have set up home there.

The road to the Scotney Castle estate goes over the A21, near Tunbridge Wells, and drivers are often unaware they are travelling on a bridge at all.

It was built wider than necessary, and the extra space has been taken up with plantlife designed to blend in with the countryside.

Rangers and volunteers working on the National Trust's wildlife conservation programme at the site spotted the tiny creatures and realised the experimental bridge had succeeded.

The female and her offspring have taken up residence on what is Britain's first wildlife land-bridge.

It was intended to provide a corridor between areas of woodland divided by the A21.

The pioneering design maintains a link across the dual carriageway between dormice communities and their habitat.

Planted along its length are trees and shrubs, so the bridge provides food and shelter for dormice that colonise the estate woodlands on either side.

Muscardinus avellanarius, more commonly known as the hazel dormouse, is an internationally protected species.

Formerly widespread throughout the UK, its numbers have dwindled as a result of loss of habitat and it is now at risk of extinction, save for a few remaining strongholds in the South East.

Ongoing management by the Trust at Scotney Castle has helped to maintain a well-established population on the estate.

Head ranger, Ross Wingfield said: "I think it's great that in such a short period of time the wildlife at Scotney Castle and its surroundings is comfortable using the land-bridge.

"This really is a major success. We have also seen on the bridge some deer, shrews and badgers."

Britain's foremost authority on dormice, Dr Pat Morris, said: "This is proof that making wildlife-friendly adjustments to bridges does actually work.

"Eight mammal species [including wood mice, common shrew and a tunnelling mole] now use it and the bridge also offers a tranquil and safe way for visitors to approach the Scotney Estate across a busy main road."

CAMOUFLAGED: The bridge over the A21 to Scotney Castle has been a big success

Star-studded tribute to life of comic Dave Lee

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

BOBBY Davro and Joe Pasquale have been confirmed as headliners for a special tribute show to celebrate the life of the late Dave Lee.

The comedian and panto star, from Canterbury, lost his battle with pancreatic cancer in January, aged 64.

Now pal Paul Hendy, producer and director of pantomimes at the Marlowe – where Dave performed more than 1,000 times – is organising a special show, Dave Lee – A Celebration, to mark the life of the roly-poly funnyman.

"The show will be a fitting tribute to Dave's wonderful career, reflecting the many different aspects of it – including music, stand-up comedy and, of course, panto," said Hendy.

"Lots of his pals have said they'd love to take part. It will be a great evening that Dave would have been proud of."

HONOURING FUNNYMAN:

Dave Lee, far left, will be remembered during an evening of entertainment headlined by Joe Pasquale Dave's showbiz friends to take to the Marlowe stage on Sunday, May 6.

Davro and Pasquale have been confirmed as headliners.

Also appearing will be East-Enders' stars Shaun Williamson, John 'Nasty Nick' Altman and Emma Barton, as will songwriter Gerard Kenny.

Other performers are expected to be confirmed in the coming weeks.

Theatre chiefs confirmed there will be a special version of the comic's famous panto ghost and bench routine, while 10 of the country's top panto dames will perform a special rendition of

There Is Nothing Like a Dame to remember Dave's memorable panto performances.

All money raised will go to Dave Lee's Happy Holidays Charity which raises money for Kent's sick and underprivileged children.

Dave's death shocked the county – with more than 1,000 people turning up to bid him an emotional farewell at a special memorial service at Canterbury Cathedral.

Tickets for the show, which starts at 7pm, are £35 and available from the box office on 01227 787787 or online at marlowetheatre.com.

ARMED FORCES

Ad inspires war veteran's return to Far East battlefield

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A PENSIONER is preparing for a trip to the Far East that will see him confront the horrors he experienced in World War Two.

William Mundy, from Dartford, was moved by a TV ad which recreated the Saving Private Ryan movie. It was promoting a project by the National Lottery which returns servicemen to their former postings, called Heroes Return.

It shows a pensioner in an Asian jungle witnessing the brutal attack that took his friends. As the ad ends, he is back in a huge military cemetery looking bewildered by the sheer horror he'd just recalled.

Realising facing those demons are sometimes beneficial, Mr Mundy will join the 51,000 ex-servicemen who have made a trip back to their own personal frontline.

For the 90-year-old, who was in the RAF, that means a trip to Jakarta, Indonesia.

he joined the RAF. He said: "I think most people would ask why on earth I would want to go back to where I had such a traumatic experience."

Mr Mundy, who was captured by the Japanese and amazingly survived being imprisoned in Java, added: "There are the war graves of the men that didn't survive and I would appreciate the opportunity to reflect on their sacrifice."

"I also especially want to visit the grave of a close friend, Eric Suter, who was one of the last to die before Ambon was evacuated."

Mr Mundy will travel with the Java Far East Prisoners of War veterans in September, and plans to take plenty of photographs as a record of his experiences.

He said: "I would like these to be able to give my children and grandchildren the knowledge of what happened."

Peter Wanless, Chairman of the National Lottery Forum, said the ad campaign stirred people's emotions.

He said: "It reminded us of the sacrifices that William Mundy and his comrades made for this nation. It brings home the importance of National Lottery funding to real lives."

Talking to a lawyer is never going to be a barrel-load of laughs. But it doesn't have to be scary.

Hi, I'm Richard Ratcliffe and my job is trying to make sure that some of the bad things that happen to people don't get worse. But, because a lot of people think talking to a lawyer will be intimidating, they will put up with a situation longer than they need to. Maybe your marriage has broken down, or perhaps you're in a dispute about land or money? Call me and maybe I can help.

CIRCLE OF FRIENDS: 2,012 young people formed a human chain during the 100-day countdown celebrations held at Cap Gris-Nez

GAMES COUNTDOWN

Olympic spirit behind 2012 efforts to strengthen Kent-Calais relationship

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WITH fewer than 100 days before the start of the Olympics, officials in Kent and Calais have come up with a series of youth events to celebrate the Games and strengthen Anglo-French relations.

The two regions already enjoy a close relationship, stemming from a common history and geographic proximity.

Plus there are many strong political and economic ties.

To mark last week's 100-day countdown there was a series of events at Cap Gris-Nez – the most northern point of the Calais region and closest to England – including 2,012 young people forming a human chain leading to a giant Olympic torch, and 1,000 joined together in the shape of the Olympic rings.

And 30 boats set sail from Cap Gris-Nez, indicating the direction of London.

A group from Kent was present to join in the fun.

In the county, to mark the official arrival of the Olympic flame in Dover on July 18, Kent County Council is organising a street procession involving people from all over Kent.

To further strengthen the partnership, 12 French schoolchildren accompanied by a teacher will be invited to take part.

This event is part of Operation Torch, during which schoolchildren in Kent and Pas-de-Calais have already been creating their own torches symbolising the exchange, the wealth of the two regions and the Olympic's values.

President of the General Council of the Pas-de-Calais, Dominique Dupilet, said: "The Pas-de-Calais region offers exceptional accessibility to England. For this reason, the general council is offering exchange programmes, holidays and educational trips to encourage the learning of English."

"The goal is for every pupil to have the chance to visit England at least once during their school years."

"Our future is closely linked with its relationship to England. The Olympics are an opportunity, amongst others, to prove how close we really are."

And he added: "We want to make sure that all generations come together and make the most of this moment."

POLICE

Tories gear up for 'full time' police candidate battle

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

TWO Tories look set to go head-to-head in the battle to become the party's candidate in the poll to choose the first Police and Crime Commissioner.

Medway councillor and chair of the area's Community Safety Partnership Mike O'Brien has become the second Conservative to throw his hat into the ring, which could put him up against Iraq war hero Colonel Tim Collins.

The Police and Crime Commissioner (PCC) will take over from Kent Police Authority in November. They will have the power to hold the force to account, determine policing strategy, set the budget and issue a five-year policing plan.

The salary is £85,000 and will be paid "irrespective of the number of days worked".

Cllr O'Brien, who is cabinet member for community safety and enforcement at Medway Council, said while the selection process had not yet started, he hoped his experience would stand him in good stead to be chosen.

"This is an exciting year to serve the people of Kent and Medway – this is one of the most dramatic changes in policing for years," he said.

"The police commissioner will be the driving force for our local policing priorities and I will ensure we deliver effective policing, punishment and financial prudence.

"As a full-time police commissioner I would push for a zero tolerance approach to reduce anti-social behaviour whilst ensuring we continue to have one of the lowest precepts in the country.

"We need a new community contract with the police so residents know what to expect from a 21st century police force, how our money is being spent, and how the police will respond to our concerns.

TORY CANDIDATE:
Councillor Mike O'Brien

"Equally, we need to deliver more effective community punishment and I would work with the courts to speed up this process so that victims of crime can see swift and fair justice."

Asked what he thought of his rival Col Collins, Cllr O'Brien, from Rainham, said: "I'd like to think we're giving our colleagues a chance to pick someone who will be a committed, full-time police commissioner."

His comments about being a "full-time" commissioner will be seen as a dig at Col Collins, from Whitstable, famed for his inspirational eve-of-battle speech to troops in the Iraq War, announced last October that he wanted to be the Conservative candidate in the PCC election.

In January, the 51-year-old highlighted his desire to involve the public in the way the force is run as one of many things he would hope to achieve as PCC.

He said: "I believe very strongly that the people of Kent need to feel a greater degree of 'ownership' over their force, not in the sense of interfering with operational independence, but in having a bigger role in how it is run and how they're given information about what is being done and why."

But he later came under fire for saying he could do the post part-time.

Although the selection process of candidates had not yet taken place, other potential competitors include Fergus Wilson, who owns hundreds of properties in Kent; Kenneth Little, an independent candidate who lives near Whitstable; and Harriet Yeo, from Ashford, a councillor seeking the Labour Party nomination.

POLITICS

A lifetime in politics gives teen platform for new role

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

DARA Farrell doesn't know if he's going to be Prime Minister one day, but if he does end up in Number 10 it will be because his youth club was closed down.

From the age of 11, Dara has been interested in politics after the loss of his local facility.

Now 18, the resident of Stanhope Estate in Ashford and a former chairman of the Kent Youth Council, is chairing a group of 11 young people on the new Youth Select Committee.

The body was launched earlier this month by the British Youth Council, and is supported by the House of Commons.

He is vice-chair of campaigns and communications at the council, and previously served as an elected member of Youth Parliament for Kent. He has even debated twice in the Commons.

Dara is studying for a joint honours degree in politics and sociology at the University of Kent, while also working as a part-time youth worker. So politics is truly in his blood.

He said: "From my background I saw how some councillors took away amenities from young people, especially on Stanhope when the youth centre was shut down.

"From an early age I was going to meetings with adults and always had plenty to say. I would like a career in politics, but I don't really know how far I will get. All the way hopefully."

The Youth Select Committee mirrors the UK Parliament Select Committee structure and gives young people an opportunity to scrutinise and hold enquiries into topics they're interested in.

The group's first inquiry, in July, will look at public transport.

Dara said: "Presently many schoolchildren having to pay adult fares. I went to school from Ashford to Canterbury and it cost a fortune using public transport and paying adult prices. It is something that is just not right.

"Our recommendations will be going to the transport minister and they have to respond to us, so perhaps this is the first step to getting the fares standardised according to age, so families won't have to keep paying full fares."

On his involvement in the Youth Select Committee, Dara said: "This is a really exciting opportunity for young people to become more actively involved in Parliament – not just campaigning on the outside, but actively influencing decision making.

"Young people have chosen transport for the first inquiry with 65,000 voting it a priority, and endorsed by votes at the British Youth Council and UK Youth Parliament last year.

"It is clearly an important issue across the UK."

Commons speaker John Bercow said: "I am delighted to support this exciting new select committee project which empowers young people to examine the issues important to them and which highlights the power of politics to change things for the better."

Tim Loughton, Parliamentary under-secretary of state for children, said: "This Youth Select Committee is a great example of how we are positive for youth: listening to young people's views on issues that really matter to them. Central government is giving young people a voice.

COMPETITION

Couple's cruise win at Travel and Leisure Show

A VISIT to a tourism event last month delivered a special surprise to one couple – after they scooped top prize in a draw to win a luxury cruise.

Jeffrey and Lyn Booth from Boxley won the star prize after attending the Travel and Leisure Show in Dover – organised by Archant KOS Media, publisher of this newspaper.

Now the lucky couple will be setting sail for Norway courtesy of Fred.Olsen Cruise Lines.

Sailing on the liner the Black Watch, they will travel to the North Cape on the Norwegian coast – said to be the northernmost tip of Europe. As they journey towards the Arctic Circle, they will call at cities such as Bergen, Tromsø and Trondheim.

Mrs Booth said: "Travel is our passion so this is a great prize. It was great to win, I'm 60 this year and this trip is the icing on the cake."

Mr Booth added: "We really enjoyed the show, it was informative with lots of great ideas for trips.

"Lyn asked me why I was entering the competition and all I said was 'someone has to win'. Well, we are both very glad I filled in the form."

WILDLIFE

Felling begins in fight to stop devastating tree-eating bug

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

AS THE fight continues to destroy an outbreak of the tree killing Asian longhorn beetle in Paddock Wood, the public have been praised for their help in seeing off the foreign invader.

The beetle is not a native of the UK and is believed to have stowed away on a lorry delivering products to a nearby business park.

If the beetle population takes hold, it could spell disaster for broadleaf trees in Kent and the rest of the UK. It burrows deep inside the trunk, lays its young which then eat their way back out, effectively killing the tree from the inside.

And they can spread very fast.

This week the Food and Environment Research Agency (Fera) and the Forestry Commission held a public meeting at the Hop Farm to outline what action they are taking and how the public can help.

So far, the experts know 22 trees in the area have been infested with the larvae of the beetle, with a further five highly likely to be infested, all in 80,000 sq m of woodland.

All the trees in this zone are being felled and will be pulverised in an effort to kill off the beetles before they spread.

As the felling started, John Morgan, head of plant health at the Forestry Commission, said: "Scientists and inspectors from Fera and the Forestry Commission have now largely completed the initial survey work and are now overseeing the felling of both infested and non-infested host trees in the infested zone."

"We are grateful to local landowners and residents for their cooperation and help."

Residents in the area have already been told what's going on after leaflets were dropped through letterboxes. It also asked for public help in spotting infested trees. The meeting underlined this appeal around Paddock Wood and East Peckham.

The adult beetles are up to 40mm long with shiny black body and variable white markings. Their antennae are particularly distinctive, being almost twice as long as their bodies and are black with white/light blue bands.

Adult beetles usually emerge from 10mm circular exit holes in the main trunk and branches between May and October.

The experts ask anyone spotting one should capture it. They are harmless apart from an ability to nip.

If anyone suspects they have seen an Asian longhorn beetle, or evidence of its presence, contact Fera Plant Health Helpline on 0844 2480071 or email planthealth.info@fera.gsi.gov.uk.

KENT REMEMBERED

Slain saint is still a hero for today after 1,000 years

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THIS year marks the 1,000th anniversary of a Kentish saint who was beatified for refusing to bow down to rampaging Vikings.

St Alphege (or in Anglo-Saxon English – Aelfheah) was killed by the invaders after he refused to allow a ransom to be paid by the people of east Kent for his return from captivity.

The story of his martyrdom starts when Vikings, who had been raiding England for hundreds of years, launched an attack on London in 994.

They were beaten off but started to attack the less defended south coast and established a winter camp close to present-day Southampton.

But a peace deal was brokered by Alphege with King of Norway Aulaf Tryggerson, the leader of the invaders.

The Scandinavian ruler was already a Christian and had been baptised, but Alphege had him confirmed.

At the time Alphege was Bishop of Winchester – after first training as a monk and then living as a hermit – but had been appointed to talk to the Vikings by King Aethelred the Unready, who was aware of the bishop's diplomatic and mediation skills.

Aulaf vowed to never again take up arms against England and as a reward for his success Alphege was made Archbishop of Canterbury in 1006.

But the Vikings were not finished with him.

In 1011 the dragon-prowed long-ships were spotted off the coast of Kent and the invaders swarmed ashore under the command of Earl Thorkell and his brothers Heming and Eglaf.

After a siege ended by the betrayal of Alfmarr Abbot of St Augustine's, Canterbury was looted. The cathedral was set on fire, many inhabitants were enslaved and Alphege was taken to the Viking camp at Greenwich as a prisoner.

The Vikings asked for £3,000 in ransom money from the people of Canterbury to get him released – but Alphege said no.

On April 19, 1012, at a drunken feast, a gang of Vikings, angry at his obstinacy, pelted Alphege with ox bones, severely wounding him.

Earl Thorkell tried to heal the injured bishop, but his wounds were too serious, and so as an act of mercy a Christian Viking named Thrum ended the bishop's suffering with an axe.

A Viking commander who had lost control of his men was not likely to feel secure, and when the invading army left England shortly afterwards, Thorkell came over to the English side with 45 ships.

The body of Alphege was left where he had fallen, on what is now the site of the parish church of St Alphege.

The Vikings refused him burial, but tradition has it that a dead stick which had been covered with his blood grew green again and started to blossom, and so the invaders relented

After initially being interred in London the body was transported down the River Thames and brought ashore at Whitstable on the way to Canterbury Cathedral, where he was finally buried.

He was made a saint in 1078 by Pope Gregory and his remembrance or feast day is April 19. Appropriately he is the patron saint of kidnap victims.

Alphest 1000 is the name of a group dedicated to celebrating his memory.

Their website states: "Alphege's story is inspirational to modern people even though it is a thousand years old.

"Today, brave men and women across the world are also facing oppression, occupation and violence. Anyone who stands up to such aggression deserves to be remembered and so in this sense Alphege is very much one of Kent's and the nation's heroes.

"Alphest 1000 is a year of celebration – remembering his story and being thankful. There will be a number of public events in 2012 – from activity days in Canterbury and Whitstable to colourful processions and projects for schools."

Among the events planned are tree planting, floral displays, church and cathedral services and this year's Whitstable Oyster festival will be dedicated to the memory of the saint.

County's work in progress

Returning Kent's economy to long-term growth means making a new deal between business and government, says KCC leader Paul Carter

THIS country has for too long relied on excessive national public expenditure. If the country is to return to growth, we will rely upon unlocking the ingenuity, innovation and investment of the private sector economies.

Many say this means that government needs to get out of the way – as Ronald Reagan said: "Government isn't the solution to the problem, it is the problem."

This isn't my view. In the last few decades, Kent County Council has formed a beneficial relationship with business and local and national government – one that is delivering real benefits to the Kent economy.

On Friday, more than 300 business leaders packed Margate's Winter Gardens.

They were there to find out how their business can potentially benefit from the new £35 million Government-Regional Growth Fund. The Expansion East Kent programme will offer interest-free loan finance to establish new businesses, to support existing business to grow and to encourage new business to locate in the districts of Thanet, Shepway, Dover and Canterbury (more at www.kent.gov.uk/expansion).

This is just part of a programme of practical support for business growth.

In addition, £5m has been allocated to work with Network Rail to improve line speeds for high-speed trains from Ashford to Canterbury and Ramsgate – bringing Margate to within an hour of London.

Discovery Park, the Pfizer site at Sandwich, has been designated an Enterprise Zone, offering 100 per cent business rate discounts. All this investment has helped retain more than 800 jobs, with the prospect of more to come – the result of local government, national government, local MPs and local business working together to a shared objective.

Across the county, pragmatic and targeted public investment is creating new jobs.

For example, at Kings Hill, a joint venture between KCC and the private sector has transformed over two decades a redundant, bleak former RAF airfield in East Malling into one of the south's premier business parks, employing almost 6,000 people – and the county council has already netted £35m for the council taxpayers of Kent.

At Margate, public investment in the award-winning Turner Contemporary gallery has supported the creation of 35 businesses, attracting a new generation of visitors to the town. Through Locate in Kent, KCC's inward investment arm, we're attracting new investors in growing sectors, such as offshore renewable energy.

Business also needs a skills system that truly responds to commercial and business needs.

We must cut red tape where it is impeding progress

Earlier this month, I launched the Kent Employment Programme, offering financial support for small businesses taking on apprentices (more at www.kent.gov.uk/apprentices).

Attracting investment into Kent depends on putting the right infrastructure in place.

Securing a Lower Thames Crossing is vital for the long-term future of our economy and we are developing solutions to deliver the crossing at zero net cost to the public purse. More immediately, nearly £10m in Government investment, match funded by KCC, is being ploughed into the broadband infrastructure.

Of course, there are times when government needs to get out of the way. At a time when businesses face tough choices, we must cut red tape where it is impeding progress.

So we must maintain an honest dialogue with business to really understand the needs of Kent's wealth creators.

A visit from Boris?
Don't hold your breath

AFTER years of council leaders asking Boris Johnson to talk to them about the airport issue, the Mayor of London has finally said he will discuss the matter – but don't hold your breath.

If he's managed to avoid meeting them so far, it's unlikely he'll be rushing here any time soon, particularly as he remains adamant Kent has nothing to worry about as "there is no current plan in place".

People in Cliffe are unlikely to believe that having already been through this once already. With the London mayoral election looming, it raises the question of whether the issue is just a political football. If so, it needs to stop so people can live without the uncertainty of a giant airport landing on their doorstep.

Forget the sunshine

WE WISHED for rain and that's what we've got, and while it's not particularly pleasant, it could go some way in helping us out of drought.

But it's going to take more than a week. So get on your wellies, suppress those hopes of sunshine, and – however alien it feels – just hope for more rain.

It's time to can waste of water

WITH the hosepipe ban now in place and everyone under threat of heavy fines if caught using one, perhaps water companies and the Government should consider the following.

It is about time that foreign companies like Coca Cola and all the others that produce cola-style drinks were stopped or severely curtailed in their waste of our precious water in such drought-stricken times.

Coca Cola Enterprises website clearly states that 95 per cent of the four billion bottles and cans of Coca Cola products sold yearly in the UK are made here.

Many of those are the large two-litre variety, and it all adds up to a gross misuse of valuable water – and for what?

Visit any supermarket and clearly visible are the long aisles and mountainous piles of rubbish drinks all made from water. Incidentally, I do know of people who consider Coca Cola to be the best lavatory cleaner on the market, so perhaps it has a use of sorts.

I have also heard we should not wash our cars and feel pride in having a dirty car to save water.

Will all the Coca Cola drinkers feel guilty about wasting water on such a rubbish product at this time?

No easy ride for motorists

READING your 'enthusiastic' article about the continuing subsidy by KCC of high-speed rail services did not enthuse me at all.

Nationally, rail companies receive about £5 billion in subsidies, but it seems this is not enough?

Drivers have £48bn extorted from them annually, of which only about £4bn is put back into new or improved roads, with another couple of billion spent on maintenance, yet 92 per cent of passenger miles are by road.

High-speed rail seems to be carrying an almost miniscule amount of passengers, yet KCC continues to throw money at it, while drivers bounce from pothole to pothole.

Terry Hudson, Herne Bay

Local issue is countryside

EDWARD La Coste's letter last week is bang on target: local elections are about local issues – we don't need local representatives who are pale reflections of their Westminster brethren.

We need strong-minded independent councillors, not central office party hacks.

I've just had a short break in Herefordshire and the current edition of the local paper, the Herefordshire Times, contains letters about, "politicians who forget they are elected to serve the people not be masters of them".

And, what about this: "Grand ego-boosting schemes pushed through at the cost of the taxpayer who didn't want them in the first place."

It's not encouraging to discover that, countryside, local politicians seem to be stamped out of common moulds, probably marked: Arrogance V 1.0; Arrogance V 1.1, etc.

In this regard, they are the strong reflection of their mates in London. We deserve better.

Edward Baker, Tunbridge Wells

Autism has a place in work

I WANT to encourage our MP to support the National Autistic Society's (NAS) Undiscovered Workforce campaign to help adults with autism into employment.

The campaign is calling upon MPs across the UK to work together with local authority services, as well as local businesses and employment providers, to improve job opportunities for people with autism.

For many, employment is a crucial factor in living a happy and independent life.

However, NAS research indicates only 15 per cent of adults with autism are in full-time employment, despite the fact that 79 per cent of those claiming out-of-work benefits told us they want to work.

Research with university leavers has shown that 26 per cent of graduates with autism are unemployed, by far the highest rate of any disability group.

One in 100 people living in Gravesend has autism so it is vital more is done locally to support these adults into work.

With the right support, people with autism can overcome the barriers to work that they often face.

I hope my MP will agree to work with other organisations in our constituency so that adults with autism have access to the same employment opportunities as others.

Kay Walsh, Gravesend

Archbishop's cross to bear

SO a new Archbishop of Canterbury has to be chosen out of the motley crew who have stood idly by while Christianity has become marginalised and Christians persecuted for their beliefs (News, April 22).

Just like the Scribes and Pharisees, they have preached another Jesus and 'swallowed camels while straining over gnats'. Agonising over trivia while Christ's real message is lost in a mish mash of nonsense.

Only Lord Carey has had the gumption to stand up for Christian values and is lobbying the European Court of Human Rights to get the same rights for Christians as are enjoyed by other religions, more protective of their beliefs.

Whoever is chosen, on present form the CoE will continue its downward slide.

Phil Granger, West Malling

Planning will end in litigation

THE Government's planning framework published last year sparked public outrage and was branded a 'developers' charter' by the National Trust.

We now have a revised version that still leaves a lot to be desired. In cutting 1,300 pages of planning regulations to just 50, vital countryside protections have been watered down or removed.

An unclear definition of 'sustainable development' could yet see a new building bonanza in the fields and green spaces of Kent.

At the very least we can expect litigation galore as developers and campaigners launch appeals to test the fuzzy definitions and loose wording in the new document.

We need a planning framework that focuses on brownfield development first and balances the need for new homes and economic growth against our treasured community green spaces.

Peter Skinner, Member of the European Parliament for the South East of England

Gold dealer's coining it while seller is left short

Q IS there, or should there be, any difference in value between gold traded as coins and gold traded as bullion? I have gold sovereigns that have no rarity value.

According to the price of gold, they should be worth about £284 each, but the best price I have been offered is £230. I accept the dealer must make a profit, but the margin seems excessive.

A THERE will always be a difference between the buying price and the selling price, for sovereigns or anything else.

Try selling a car back to the dealer minutes after you have bought it, and see if he offers you anything like the price you paid.

That said, you should be able to do better than £230 apiece for your coins.

They move in line with the bullion price, less a discount that gives the dealer a profit. The bullion price has actually fallen a little since you wrote to me. It was £1,116 an ounce, and has now dropped to about £1,087. But despite this fall, there are dealers who are offering comfortably more than £230 for sovereigns.

For example, Gold Traders (0800 327 7878) guarantees a minimum of just under £239.

And dealer Malcolm Ellis (01428 685566) aims to pay the bullion price less just 1.5pc, and has recently been offering £251 for gold sovereigns. So don't settle for £230.

Q I KNOW an elderly lady who is paying direct debits for entries in Australian and Spanish lotteries. She will not believe this is illegal. Can you offer any advice please, as she can ill afford these payments?

A THERE are really two separate questions here. First, is it illegal to enter foreign lotteries? And secondly, is it sensible?

There is nothing to stop your friend from buying foreign lottery tickets.

Companies selling the tickets could technically be breaking the law, but in practice it is almost impossible to block sales over the internet or by phone.

However, my bet is that she is not actually buying lottery tickets.

There are foreign companies that buy a block of tickets and then market shares in that block of numbers.

For example: suppose I spend £1,000 on 1,000 lottery tickets, and then sell 5,000 shares in that block of numbers at £1 a share.

If a number comes up then my customers will win a one-fifth share of the prize. But meanwhile, I have turned my £1,000 into £5,000.

My customers could have spent their £1 on one ticket, but by giving their money to me, they have effectively bought just one fifth of a ticket. Tell your friend she is very unlikely to be getting value for money.

TONY HETHERINGTON

Q I AM thinking of entering the buy-to-let market, as I believe property prices are unlikely to fall further. However, the best mortgage I can find is only 70pc of the price. Do you know of any lenders who will advance more?

A NATWEST offers a buy-to-let loan of up to 75pc of the purchase price. Interest is variable, currently at 3.89pc. However, there is a fairly hefty arrangement fee of £1,999.

Q WE have a low interest fixed-rate mortgage. If our lender is taken over by another bank or building society, could the new owner charge higher interest?

A SEVERAL readers have asked this, probably because a company called The Mortgage Works – part of Nationwide – has taken over the mortgage business of the Bank of Ireland and is increasing interest rates even though the Bank of England base rate is unchanged.

However, only borrowers with variable rate loans are affected. If your lender is taken over, the new owner will have to respect the existing terms of your fixed-rate loan.

Q MY wife and I made a complaint to the Financial Ombudsman over the rejection of a motoring insurance claim. That was last September, but we seem to be no further forward. Is there anyone who investigates complaints against the ombudsman?

A THE ombudsman has a huge workload so I suggest you let her know that you are thinking of complaining.

But if you do want to go ahead, an outside official called the independent assessor does keep an eye of the ombudsman's service, and you can write to her at PO Box 35738, London E14 9YU, or by email to independent.assessor@financial-ombudsman.org.uk.

Shop around for cover that's ideal pick-me-up

There is an increasing number of options for motorists looking for breakdown cover, as ADAM AIKEN reports

TOP TIPS

THERE are a few things to think about when you come to buy or renew breakdown cover.

As well as standalone products, there are other ways to take out cover, such as via a car insurance policy.

Scott Kelly, at Gocompare, said: "It's worth establishing whether you'd be better off buying breakdown as an added extra with your car insurance or separately."

And Miranda Schunke, a spokesman for Green Flag, said motorists with packaged bank accounts that included breakdown cover, or people who received cover via their car insurance policies, should check to see what they were getting for their money.

You should not think of this cover as a bonus or a freebie – you are paying for it through your insurance premiums or monthly bank account fees.

"You can always ask to see if the level of your breakdown cover can be increased, or if you can get a discount on what you are paying," she said. "You can still get different levels of cover with these policies, and if you can make a saving then it's got to be worthwhile."

Brand new vehicles are likely to come with a year's breakdown cover as standard. If this applies to you, not only will you not need to buy a standalone breakdown policy, but make sure you don't pay too much for an insurance policy that comes with bundled breakdown cover.

As with all insurance products, do not automatically renew with your existing provider without seeing if you can get a better deal elsewhere.

Many breakdown policies use auto-renewal, whereby premiums are taken from your bank account or credit card automatically unless you cancel the policy. Make sure you keep a note of the renewal date and have a look at the market a couple of weeks before then. That should give you plenty of time to cancel the auto-renewal if you decide to take your custom elsewhere.

Miss Schunke, at Green Flag, said motorists could also benefit by choosing risk-rated products.

Some policies are one-size-fits-all, but Miss Schunke said that drivers with new vehicles unlikely to break down should look for policies that reflected that lower risk.

irrespective of what cars they are in.

"Likewise, some policies require you to pay for any services you receive upfront, and then claim these expenses back," Mr Kelly said.

"These policies tend to be cheaper, but ask yourself whether the savings you'd make would be worth the inconvenience of having to fork out for towing, repairs and suchlike and then submitting receipts in order to get your money back."

Should I stick with the big boys?

MILLIONS of motorists have been members of the AA or the RAC and have had peace of mind thanks to them.

Even a high-end policy costing £130 works out at only about 28p a day – not much for the security of knowing you are covered.

But analysts say you should not ignore other operators. The market is now much more competitive and you can get decent breakdown cover much more cheaply.

"There are a number of other providers in the market that offer comprehensive breakdown cover for a fraction of what the big players charge, so it really can pay off to shop around and get the level of cover you need at the best possible price," said Mr Harrison.

A fully-comprehensive annual AA policy, including roadside assistance, home-start and onward travel, costs £130. The equivalent policy with Green Flag costs less than £50.

For an even bigger saving, the Green Insurance Company charges less than £30 for its recovery policy.

"Don't be put off by lesser-known brands," said Mr Harrison.

"They tend to offer around the same call-out times as the bigger brands – for example, the Green Insurance Company states that its average call-out time is 40 minutes, just 10 minutes longer than the AA's 30 minutes.

"So it really can pay to shop around and get the level of cover you need at the best possible price."

Joint venture could mean county grows UK's first seedless grapes

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

A PIONEERING project is set to see seedless grapes grown in Britain for the first time as scientists look to give UK food-producers a share of a multi-million-pound market.

East Malling Research and supermarket giant Asda have launched the project to discover the feasibility of growing table grapes rather than relying on imported fruit.

It will be the first time that seedless grapes have been grown on British soil commercially.

UK shoppers buy £500 million of seedless grapes a year from more than 15 different countries worldwide, so it is an extremely lucrative market.

The grape-planting will see a number of different varieties – green, red and black – being grown at the site.

It is predicted that the vines, which have been imported from Spain, Italy and Greece, will be providing fruit as soon as two years' time and that the project will be commercially viable by 2016 as the vines mature and produce more crops.

The grapes will be harvested during the European grape season – from August to October – and will include both open-air production and vines under polytunnel.

The covered grapes should grow quicker and also have the potential of extending the season, meaning British grapes could soon be on Asda shelves for up to three months each year.

Although this is the first time seedless grapes have been grown in the UK, Kent is well known for its wine-production.

Its climate and soil have often been compared favourably to the French Champagne region and, with the effects of climate change, may soon be able to produce a wider range of more exotic fruits such as apricots, kiwi fruit and melons.

Dr Chris Atkinson, head of science at East Malling Research, said: "We are delighted to undertake this table-grapes trial in partnership with Asda, which has clearly recognised our wealth of experience and expertise in the development and evaluation of novel crops.

"By trialling 10 varieties of table grapes at East Malling, EMR is now in a position to lead subsequent UK research and development of this fruit.

"It also offers us a fantastic opportunity for us to gauge how the South East is

PICK OF THE BUNCH: Asda has joined East Malling Research in a pioneering attempt to grow seedless grapes on UK soil for the first time being affected by climate change and to demonstrate how we can best adapt our growing habits in the region to continue to produce UK foods."

Tom Murray, Asda's grape technical manager, said: "This is an incredibly exciting project which we have been working on since 2007.

"The thought of buying UK-grown seedless grapes may once have been unimaginable, but this project has the potential to revolutionise the grape market.

"We're really excited to watch the vines grow over the next couple of years and to start eating British grapes."

PROPERTY

Property portals unite to make search easier

THREE of the top four property-finders in the country are to join forces.

Home-hunters will soon see the merger of the second, third and fourth largest property portals, Zoopla, FindaProperty and Primelocation.

The move creates a definitive number two in a marketplace currently led by Rightmove.

Martin Cunningham, commercial director of Archant Community Media's property portal homes24.co.uk, which is part of the Zoopla network, said: "The green light given by the Office Of Fair Trading paves the way for the creation of a UK-leading marketplace of residential property, delivering consumers the very best choice of homes to buy or rent."

It is anticipated the merger will complete at the end of May, after which it is expected the new combined business shall work to aggregate the property content into a single marketplace.

Cunningham said: "Zoopla's technology provides a range of moving tools, available at homes24.co.uk. One, called HomeValues, offers homeowners the ability to get, free of charge, a desktop estimate of value of their property.

"The site also offers a forum in which buyers, sellers, landlords and tenants can post questions to be answered by property professionals."

RELOCATION

Investment agency helps company expansion plans and increase staff

A HOVERCRAFT-maker is looking to make more waves in the leisure and sport industries after relocating and expanding the business.

Flying Fish, which specialises in testing, developing and building a range of 'sports-cruiser' light hovercraft, has moved to premises in Sandwich and taken on four more members of staff.

The new Flying Fish factory and the company's 11-strong team is capable of building 100 wave-skimming machines a year – double that of the previous site in Dover.

Director Emma Pullen said: "The business is well placed to further increase production on its Sandwich site, found with assistance from investment agency Locate in Kent.

"We are delighted to have expanded our workforce and doubled productivity, but there is much more to come.

"We can now produce more and have additional space to further expand operations in the future. We would like to thank Locate in Kent for their support, both in terms of helping us search for the perfect premises and also acting as a middleman during negotiations."

Paul Wookey, chief executive at Locate in Kent, said: "It is often the case that successful SMEs such as Flying Fish Hovercraft need to relocate to expand the business and we are more than happy to offer assistance in the search for a new site.

"We can help companies looking to move find a new premises. Through offering this service we can deliver growth and bring thousands of new jobs into the county."

Figures on the up but confidence stays low

BUSINESS confidence remains low in the region despite encouraging figures for company turnover, growth and productivity.

The latest UK Business Confidence Monitor with the Confidence Index now stands at -7.4.

This is well below a high of +29.8 seen in Q2 of 2010 and reflects the region's concerns over global economic conditions and the Eurozone crisis.

The study is carried out by accountancy group ICAEW/Grant Thornton.

The rate of export growth reported by firms in the South East has been slowing since mid-2011. This quarter they report expansion of 2.7 per cent over the last 12 months, down from 4.8 per cent in the 12 months to Q3 2011.

Slowing export growth will have an impact both on the region's local economy and the UK as a whole as goods exports in the South East are equivalent to almost a quarter of the regional economy, while 14.9 per cent of all UK goods exports come from the region.

Despite this, firms in the South East have maintained a stable rate of growth throughout 2011. Furthermore, firms expect the rate of growth in turnover, profits and sales to pick up over the coming year.

NEW START

Support for your launch

HELPING new businesses to establish themselves and grow as quickly as possible is the philosophy behind a new initiative developed by Kent Science Park in partnership with Locate in Kent.

Building on the already strong partnership between the science park and the county's investment promotion agency Locate in Kent, LaunchPad is designed to help attract new companies to the county, create jobs and safeguard existing ones, as well as provide a home for the growth of local businesses.

James Speck, site director of Kent Science Park, said: "LaunchPad is timely as there is renewed interest in start-up businesses.

"As the recession has hit hard, many skilled people who have unfortunately found themselves being made redundant have increasingly looked to put their skills and redundancy cheques to good work and take charge of their own destiny."

The park has made a significant investment in the initiative by refurbishing 11,000 sq ft of commercial property and creating the LaunchPad Innovation offices and laboratories.

Speck said: "Importantly, LaunchPad combines this entrepreneurial spirit with the crucial elements for business success, namely access to a wide range of expert professional advice at an early stage, together with flexible business accommodation in the form of offices or laboratories."

The aim of LaunchPad is to help companies relocating to the park to quickly develop quality links with local professional advisers and like-minded businesses and ensure the county reaps the maximum reward from the new arrival.

Richard Wheeler, business development director at Kent Science Park, said: "Connecting business people with expert advisers, and helping new tenants at the park to realise their full commercial potential, is at the heart of LaunchPad. The winners will be the individual businesses, as well as the Kent economy."

"The park also has longstanding relations with many universities across London, Kent, the UK and overseas in Europe, and new arrivals can quickly link into these networks."

In developing LaunchPad, Kent Science Park has worked with Locate in Kent and a number of its commercial partners.

EU regulations slammed as 'wine' has to be given away

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

COMPLEX European Union regulations should be watered down in the light of Chapel Down's recent red-wine red-tape headache, according to food specialist Vertex Law.

The Tenterden winery's plans to sell a vintage made from Argentinian Malbec grapes fell foul of EU legislation – meaning it now has to give the bottles to regular customers and shareholders.

Restrictive regulations even prevented Chapel Down from using the terms 'wine' and 'Malbec' on the labelling; they were slammed as "complete nonsense" by its chief executive Frazer Thompson.

The award-winning winery has been forced to mark its new Anglo-Argentinian drink as a "fruit-based alcoholic beverage".

Chapel Down representatives created 1,200 bottles of the world's first cross-border wine after staff visited the vineyard in Mendoza, which lies 3,500 ft above sea level, and chose the grapes they wanted harvested, which had to be flown to the UK within five days to keep them fresh.

But plans to sell the vintage were thwarted by EU Food Standards regulations, which prohibit wine being sold if it is made from imported grapes.

Kate Mayor, commercial lawyer at Kings Hill-based Vertex Law, said: "Sadly, by importing the grapes from Argentina and making the wine here, Chapel Down fell foul of the regulation which does not allow grapes produced outside of the EU to be made into wine within the EU."

"It seems ludicrous that a law designed to protect has had the opposite effect, particularly where the intention appears to be only to forge strong cross-border relations and not flood the market with a cheap wine at the expense of other EU producers. Perhaps it would be helpful for there to be a way of carving out such ventures from the legislation."

And the wines cannot be sold at all, according to the rules. Instead the bottles are being sent as a free gift to shareholders and to customers ordering other products.

Thompson said: "The legislation is complete nonsense."

"It is stifling innovation. Our staff had a fantastic learning journey when they went to Argentina, showing how people who are passionate about creating something new can work together."

Mayor added: "Chapel Down's Malbec mishap came about as a result of EU Single Common Marketplace Organisation Regulation No 1234/2007, which sets out the rules on the production of wine either made in the EU or imported into the EU."

"This legislation aims to protect the EU wine sector by ensuring European wine-producers are not pushed out of the market in the face of rising commercial pressure from imported wines from across the world."

"It provides protection for designations of origin, requires that wine is produced and conserved according with EU laws, and makes it a requirement that wine imported into the EU is sold according to agreed international standards."

Andrew Maidment, European manager of trade group Wines Of Argentina, said: "The wine industry is all about collaboration, but nothing like this has ever been done before."

"When I approached the British wine-makers, they said 'It sounds completely crazy, but we'll give it a go'."

"It's something unique, which makes it very exciting. It was also a big risk as we didn't know what was going to happen with it – whether it would be a fantastic bottle or whether it would be undrinkable."

"It was very important that, while the grapes came from Argentina, this wine wasn't made by Argentina. It was produced completely by the British vineyard, with no one telling them what to do."

"It's a bit of a madcap idea, but it worked as a celebration of the two industries working together."

"It wasn't conceived with anything political in mind, but in the current climate I think everyone would be happier to have people making wine than making war."

TIME FOR CHANGE:

Kate Mayor of Vertex Law says the red tape disallowing the sale of Chapel Down's latest creation needs to be changed

AWARD

International network win

KRESTON International, the parent company of Kent accountancy and business advisory company Reeves, has won the International Accounting Bulletin's Rising Star Network Award.

Chatham and Canterbury-based Reeves is one of the longest-serving members of Kreston International, a global network of independent accountancy firms and business advisers. It ranks in the top 15 largest accounting networks in the world, covers more than 95 countries and has more than 600 offices providing a resource of more than 19,000 professional and support staff.

The awards, sponsored by global insurance broker Aon, attracted more than 100 international nominations.

Kreston was shown to have demonstrated exceptional growth, ambition and innovation to elevate its position in the market.

At the ceremony, IAB editor Arvind Hickman said: "Kreston posted solid growth of 5 per cent, but what really impressed judges is their successful transition from an association to a network. This is a massive undertaking, and Kreston and its global membership was recently welcomed to the Forum Of Firms for its efforts."

Clive Stevens, managing partner at Reeves and chairman of Kreston International, said: "I am delighted Kreston has been recognised in this way. Winning this award strengthens the importance of international connections."

Arabian deal smells good to manufacturer

CANTERBURY-based Claremont & May Fragrance & Home has signed an investment deal with Al Safa Group of Saudi Arabia.

The company is celebrating 21 years of manufacturing home-fragrance products, which are sold worldwide.

The range includes pot

pourri, room sprays, fragrance oils and fragrance-oil diffusers.

Managing director Sultan Khan said: "Claremont & May products have always been in great demand, but in these tough economic times it has been difficult and expensive to obtain traditional lines of funding to grow the company."

"So we are excited to have secured an overseas investor from the Middle East, which not only gives us the opportunity to satisfy demand but expand our portfolio. This will create jobs as all our products are made here in the UK."

Al Safa Group has more than 300 stores across the Middle East.

Travel company goes international in take-over

CT Business Travel has announced its purchase of Medway Travel Limited, based in Maidstone.

The company is a member of Uniglobe, which promotes excellence throughout the travel business.

Mark Kempster, CT Business Travel managing director, said: "Synergies between the two organisations were obvious and we felt that adding the Uniglobe offering to Medway Travel's business and it becoming an international travel-management company would further enhance its client proposition."

"Medway Travel will continue to operate under the same brand which it has done for the past 18 years. All staff jobs are safe and its Maidstone office will also remain, which is fantastic news and a win-win for all."

Training, courses and careers

Adult ed moves into new venues

MORE adult education classes in community venues will be offered to Medway learners from September.

The news follows the decision taken by Medway Council's cabinet members to close Green Street adult education centre.

Councillors decided the building was no longer fit for purpose due to its age, layout and general lack of facilities that are expected by today's learners.

From the start of new academic year, arrangements have been made for classes to be held elsewhere throughout Gillingham and the wider Medway area.

Daytime classes for adults with learning disabilities will take place at the Sunlight Centre, while evening classes for those with learning difficulties will take place at Rainham School for Girls.

Training for people who work in the fitness industry will take place at Medway Park, and greater use will be made of Woodlands School community centre.

Evening classes that would have been at Green Street will be transferred to Chatham Grammar School for Boys, Strood Academy, Hundred of Hoo, and Rainham School for Girls.

All other classes will be held at the Rochester Centre.

Youngsters urged to use new service

YOUNG people are being encouraged by a Kent MP to use a new careers service launched by the Department of Business, Innovation and Skills.

The National Careers Service combines face-to-face local advice with a new interactive website, which can be seen at <https://national-careersservice.direct.gov.uk>.

Sittingbourne and Sheppey Tory MP Gordon Henderson said: "Sittingbourne and Sheppey has approximately 3,200 unemployed people, many of whom do not yet know which career path they would like to take, or they are struggling to meet the criteria set by employers so access to local advice would prove invaluable to them in helping to find and achieve their potential."

Officials say it is expected the new service will provide information and advice through the helpline and website; offer face to face advice; provide detailed sector-by-sector labour market information; provide tools such as a CV builder and Skills Health Check; and provide information on skills, careers and financial support.

Garden centre planning new crop of apprentices

IT'S not only large corporations and local authorities that can help train the next generation of skilled workers, smaller businesses can play their part as well.

The latest example is Tunbridge Wells Garden Centre, which has broken new ground for the industry and launched an apprenticeship programme.

The garden centre in Eridge Road is offering the scheme to people aged 16 and above.

Manager Chris Dartnell, explained: "We are delighted to be launching an apprenticeship programme at the garden centre.

"The scheme is the first of its kind for the horticultural industry and is a great opportunity for people to gain employment, particularly during the current economic climate.

"The apprenticeship will combine a blended learning approach with full integration into the garden centre.

"Knowledge-based learning will be accessed online, while college-based classes, which will take place at selected horticultural colleges, will develop the apprentices' practical skills.

"These will then be put into practice in the workplace.

"We are recruiting individuals for our July to September intake. The closing date for registrations is Tuesday, July 31, 2012."

All the garden centre's apprentices who successfully complete the programme will receive a work-based Diploma in Horticulture.

The 12-month programme includes an apprenticeship wage, which is dependant on a candidate's age. A 'celebration bonus' of £500 will also be paid to those who complete the scheme.

After 12 months, higher level apprenticeships, linked to the management development strategy of the garden centre, will be available to successful candidates, subject to application.

Mr Dartnell added: "There are excellent career benefits for people who do an apprenticeship as they can combine the experience of working with gaining qualifications.

"Apprentices learn on the job, building up knowledge and skills, gaining qualifications and earning money all at the same time."

Tunbridge Wells Garden Centre is looking for individuals who have an interest in horticulture and have the following core values: courtesy and dedication to customer service; leadership; commercial thinking; team spirit; the ability to work with others; commitment; and flexibility.

To register for an apprenticeship scheme with Tunbridge Wells Garden Centre, email apprenticeships@thegardencentre-tregroup.co.uk for an application form.

Veterinary nursing laboratory nominated for top design award

CANTERBURY College's new veterinary nursing laboratory has been nominated for a top design award.

The state-of-the-art lab is in the running to win an S-Lab award for laboratory design.

The awarding body was impressed by its top-range facilities that include a mock surgical theatre, X-ray machinery, an incubator and anaesthetic and radiography training areas.

The design allows veterinary nursing and animal management students to experience the conditions of working in a practicing veterinary lab.

They learn about animal anatomy and physiology, behaviour and handling techniques.

The lab is part of the new multi-million pound A-Block building that opened at the New Dover Road campus in January.

Alan Carver, Canterbury College's capital projects manager, said: "We're proud to be shortlisted for the award because it recognises the hard work that went into making this a first-class teaching facility. We worked closely with our veterinary nursing and animal care staff who all have industry experience, throughout the design process."

Canterbury College is one of only five colleges and schools in the UK to be shortlisted for the S-Lab award in its category. The awards are judged by industry experts, with the winners announced in June.

Pupil flicks to win an iPad in marketing makeover competition

CREATIVE artwork from a group of Broadstairs students is being used to help market the relaunch of the Humbrol paints brand.

The colourful range of images and installations were the result of design brief from Margate-based Hornby Hobbies, which gave Year 10 students at the Charles Dickens School free rein to give the traditional product a marketing makeover.

Designs using Hornby rail track, model cars and trains, Airfix kits parts, and more, resulted in a range of ideas including a tornado, Van Gogh, Elvis Presley, Thomas the Tank Engine, the Golden Gate bridge, an autumn tree, flowers and bees, a shipwreck, a roller coaster, a Spitfire, a multi-coloured broly, and guitars.

Hornby chief executive Frank Martin selected a simple yet strong image by visually impaired student Matthew Baldwin based around a piece of Banksy artwork.

The 15-year-old won an iPad, and said: "I always remember how much of an impression the Banksy image made on me the first time I saw it and it really stuck in my mind. It was hard work doing a cut out stencil as part of the project, and then I flicked a range of Humbrol paint colours across and around it in layers of spray. Mr Martin said the image really grabbed him."

Headteacher Andrew Olsson said: "It has been fantastic for our art students to be involved in a real-world business project that has given them inspirational learning.

"We are so proud of the results, we have created walk plinths and mounted some of the most striking designs in our school cafeteria area."

'Satisfying' survey finds college's former students in jobs or education

A SURVEY of former MidKent College students shows a high proportion progress to higher education or employment in the year after their course ends.

The 'student destinations' report – for which the college contacted nearly 2,000 people – revealed that 86 per cent of those who left in July, 2011, have either gone on to university or are currently in employment.

And five per cent returned to the college for more studies.

Under the previous Government's quality guidelines, which have now been withdrawn, MidKent College says it would have been graded "outstanding" for the overall findings of the survey.

The 91 per cent total figure is also an increase of three per cent on the previous year.

Assistant principal Alan Ashfield said: "At a time of high unemployment it's extremely satisfying to see so many of our students progressing into jobs or higher education.

"People study at MidKent College because they want to receive the best possible education, and these high figures demonstrate that is exactly what they are getting.

"We do our best to keep in contact with our former students, so we know they often move onto some pretty impressive things."

KENT'S BIG GREEN BUSINESSES

AWARDS

Double recognition for eco-friendly firm

AN Ashford business leader has been short-listed in two categories of the region's most prestigious business awards – the Institute of Directors' London And South East Director Of The Year, sponsored by accountancy PricewaterhouseCoopers.

Sonja Wood, director of EcoSan Services, has been short-listed in the category for director of the year for a business up to £4.99 million and for new business director of the year. She is the only female director and the only one from Kent to reach the finals of this year's awards.

EcoSan offers eco-friendly washroom solutions to businesses in every sector. It was the first southern business to offer sanitary, nappy and incontinence recycling and recently recorded another first by recycling chewing gum.

Wood said: "I'm absolutely delighted to be recognised for my efforts to help reduce our carbon footprint. I'm passionate about the environment and have created a company that lives and breathes green values. I'm incredibly proud of EcoSan's achievements in recycling 75 tonnes of waste a year."

EcoSan was winner in the business commitment to the environment category at the 2011 Kent Excellence in Business Awards and Wood was nominated as a 2011 finalist in the entrepreneur of the year category.

Wood said: "I have strived to deliver consistent growth and identified new opportunities to recycle waste, continuing to set and achieve ambitious targets."

Rodger Broad, director for the IoD in the South East, said: "These annual awards recognise the hard work, inspiration and management skills of business leaders in a wide variety of sectors."

"We are pleased and encouraged that we had 250 directors being put forward this year, despite these challenging economic times."

From these we had more than 100 entries to consider for the awards. That means the finalists have already survived a painstaking selection process."

Andrew Latham, head of PricewaterhouseCoopers' private business practice in the South East, said: "During these tough economic times the importance of dynamic and strong leadership has never been more important."

"PwC are delighted to support an event that celebrates the success of those directors in London and the South East who have differentiated their companies in the marketplace in such a positive and inspiring manner."

SOLAR PANELS

Cricket club harnesses the sun's power

SHERWOOD Cricket Club in Rochester has installed 28 solar panels with the help of solar-energy company Freetricity.

The club has decided to go green as part of its programme to become more energy-efficient. Chairman Tony Rossiter said: "The installation of solar panels from Freetricity is the first step for the club to use renewable-energy sources.

"With the cost of electricity, gas and water increasing, it is vital that we look at the longer-term benefits of renewable energy and alternative sources for our energy and water usage in addition to reducing our club's carbon footprint."

Dave Compton, sales and marketing director at Freetricity, said: "We are delighted to have supplied and installed a solar PV system at Sherwood.

"They are the first cricket club in Kent to have the benefit of a Freetricity solar system and we look forward to working with them to gain the full benefits from this."

Peter Robinson, director of Kent Cricket Board and head of the Kent Groundsman Association, said: "Cricket clubs play a key part in sustaining the green agenda.

"Hectare for hectare, turf grass will sequester more carbon into the soil each year than the same area of woodland.

"The maintenance regime operated by cricket clubs on its playing surfaces is vital to the annual oxygen production and carbon dioxide fixation.

"A healthy grass sward is vital to carbon sequestration – the process of removing carbon from the atmosphere and depositing it in the soil reservoir."

Springboard funding enables development of 'mole' drill

A FAVERSHAM business with an innovative idea to tackle climate change has won a £40,000 Shell Springboard award.

Geo-Mole Ltd received the financial boost for its device to simplify and cut the cost of installing underground heat pumps.

Shell Springboard is a UK Social Investment programme, which provides a financial boost to small and medium enterprises with innovative, low-carbon business ideas. The awards build on Shell's overall commitment to help the UK meet its future energy needs responsibly.

Geo-thermal heating and hot water is one of the most effective forms of renewable energy, using the heat that is produced naturally beneath the Earth's core to heat homes and businesses. However, uptake is limited due to the large machinery currently needed to install the technology.

Geo-Mole Ltd's product changes this by eliminating the need for drilling rigs thanks to a small pneumatic mole that displaces soil. The mole allows pipes to be put into the earth at the desired depth and connected to a ground-source heat pump.

Mark Brice, director of Geo-Mole, said: "Geo-thermal heating is a brilliant source of renewable energy but inaccessible to lots of home-owners because of the huge drilling technology that is currently used. Our small pneumatic mole removes the need for this, meaning that even homes with restricted space, such as mid-terrace houses in cities, can have access to geo-thermal for the first time.

"It's incredibly rewarding that such a prestigious programme as Shell Springboard has recognised the potential of Geo-Mole, and the funding will allow us to continue to develop our business."

John MacArthur, of Shell, said: "Through Springboard, Shell aims to encourage others to innovate as well, helping to support the transition to a lower-carbon economy and seizing this new market opportunity."

"It's our belief that the innovative services and technologies that small businesses provide can make an important contribution to reducing the UK's carbon emissions. I congratulate Geo-Mole on their success and wish all of our finalists the very best."

Since its launch in 2005, Shell Springboard has judged more than 1,000 entries and awarded some £2 million to 52 businesses across the country.

PILGRIMS CORNER FOSTERING

Putting children first means giving you up-to-date training PILGRIMS Corner Fostering is a relatively new agency in the world of fostering. However, its creators and staff are all former foster-carers.

This means the directors and managers can all share their experiences of looking after some of the most vulnerable children in our society with those families who decide that they would like to work with us.

Lyn Norman and Sarah Curry own and operate the agency, with Harry Deering as operations manager. All three have been foster-carers and therefore fully understand the processes, thoughts, feelings and excitement a family can experience when offered their very first placement.

Lyn, Sarah and Harry always provide plenty of support at this stage.

The role of foster-carer is one of the most rewarding careers there is. To see a young person grow and flourish by being placed in your family and being treated as one of your own is wonderful.

As a company we are lucky to have some truly exceptional families who have knowledge, experience and compassion and are driven to help their young people move forwards with their lives in a good and positive way.

Our families provide loving and caring environments in which the foster-family integrate the child into the family as if they were one of their birth children. We are looking to expand our business by recruiting more carers this year. If you think this is for you, give us a call – we'd love to hear from you.

The agency has regular support meetings at which carers can meet and discuss their experiences; this is invaluable as you can ask questions of families who may have more, or maybe different, experiences to you. There is also 24-hour support for all families if needed and plenty of high-quality training on offer.

Our agency ploughs most of its income back into training carers, ensuring our children are given high-quality care and that they have the opportunities to undertake activities that they enjoy.

Our services are monitored by progress, which is mapped by our Ofsted reports and the grades we earn.

Our organisation has robust measures in place to recruit new staff and carers. We are actively seeking to do this in 2012 and encourage you to call to arrange for us to come and see you to discuss the possibility of becoming a foster-carer with us.

B2B CONFERENCE AND EXHIBITION

Chamber event will include key skills workshops

ONE of Kent's biggest business conferences and exhibitions will get a new look this summer, and for the first time it will include workshops offering a range of free advice.

The Kent and Medway B2B Conference and Exhibition at the Ashford International Hotel on Tuesday, July 3, is being organised by Kent Invicta Chamber of Commerce.

"This year we are giving the event a radical overhaul based on what businesses have told us they want to see at the event", said Jo James, chief executive of Kent Invicta Chamber.

"This will be the one-stop shop for long-established, new and prospective businesses. As well as the usual networking opportunities, this will give the chance to learn from experts and take part in key skills workshops."

For the first time the exhibition will have business advice and start-up zones offering free advice on a range of topics including how to raise finance, international markets, personnel and staff development, innovation and sales. There are sponsorship opportunities for anyone wanting to put their brand on these specialist areas.

The start-up zone is specifically aimed at companies in their first year of trading and anyone who's thinking of setting up a business.

The day will begin with a networking breakfast, and more than 120 businesses are expected to exhibit in the conference area.

The specialist workshops will run throughout the day and there will also be a chance to talk to business leaders about their experiences.

"Kent businesses are doing well in some very tough times, but this is designed to help them do even better," said Ms James.

Businesses can find out more by emailing bookings@kentinvictachamber.co.uk or phoning 01622 232707.

BEST DESTINATION EXPERIENCE

International win

DOVER Cruise Port and Visit Kent have jointly won the prestigious Cruise Insight award for Best Destination Experience (Organised Tours) 2011.

The awards were announced and presented during the Cruise Shipping Convention in Miami, US, where the two organisations exhibit in the Cruise Britain pavilion.

Kate O'Hara, head of business delivery at Port of Dover, said: "The partnership between Dover Cruise Port and Visit Kent has been extremely successful in promoting the wealth and variety of attractions and themes over the years.

"As a result the joint venture has seen an increase in the number of cruise calls to Dover Cruise Port.

"The award demonstrates the commitment to deliver high levels of customer service and wonderful experiences that passengers continue to enjoy during their stay in Kent."

VISIT KENT

Celebrations as partnership marks 10 years

VISIT Kent started a year of celebrations marking its 10th anniversary with the cutting of a celebratory cake at Kent 2020 Live.

The public-and-private partnership was launched in 2002 to promote the county as a tourism destination.

"In the last 10 years, the face of tourism in Kent has changed beyond all recognition," said Sandra Matthews-Marsh, chief executive.

"Our historic buildings, such as Leeds and Dover castles and the cathedrals at Canterbury and Rochester, are enduring, but today you can look around the county and add to them modern, world-class tourist attractions such as the Turner Contemporary at Margate and the No 1 Smithery at the Historic Dockyard, Chatham.

"Their development has been mirrored by a growth in boutique hotels and restaurants using local produce.

"The last 10 years has also seen a massive improvement in transport links to the county, including High Speed 1, making it easier for people to reach us and so leading to an increase in visitors. This saw tourism's economic impact on the local economy rise by 33 per cent between 2003 and 2009."

Visit Kent has built a reputation for innovation in the past decade with events such as the hugely-popular My Kent Big Weekend, which is now being studied by other visitor destinations around the country.

"Visit Kent has been an enormous success in the 10 years it has been in existence," said Alex King, deputy leader of Kent County Council.

"The drive and vision shown by all of the team has seen tourism make an increasingly-important contribution to the county's economy."

"Visit Kent-inspired events such as My Kent Big Weekend and campaigns such as the Kent Contemporary series of advertisements have helped to raise the profile of Kent's attractions, both man-made and natural, and position the county as one of the leading destinations in the UK.

"Kent can be proud of its tourism industry, which only looks set to grow and prosper thanks to the continued efforts of Visit Kent."

Matthews-Marsh said: "We are proud of the work we have done and the progress we have made in the last 10 years, and are delighted that our anniversary falls in such an exciting year, with the Diamond Jubilee and the London Olympics offering a wealth of opportunities for tourism businesses in the county.

"We intend to mark this important year in our history with a number of events to thank those who have supported us since our launch, and who we know will continue to support us in the future."

The new length of Canterbury Road West located east of its junction with "Cliffsend" roundabout has been declassified and it is proposed the existing lengths that are currently national speed limit be subject to a lower speed limit of 50mph. This will be from a point 80 metres east of the mid point of its junction with "Cliffsend" roundabout eastwards, to a point 108 metres west of the western boundary of number 54 and from a point 128 metres east of the mid point of its junction with Sea View Road eastwards, to a point 140 metres south west of the mid point of its junction with the "Lord of the Manor" northern roundabout.

The current 30mph length in the residential section of Canterbury Road West will be extended slightly in both directions to meet with the terminal points at the extents of the 50mph speed limit.

The existing 40mph speed limit on Sandwich Road will be extended southwards to a point 103 metres south west of the south western boundary of number 131, which is prior to the new traffic calming measure and will encourage drivers to reduce their speeds before they drive through the residential section of Sandwich Road.

The proposals include the introduction of a 7.5 Tonne weight limit, except for access on Canterbury Road West, from a point 35 metres east of the mid point of its junction with "Cliffsend" roundabout eastwards, to a point 28 metres south west of the mid point of its junction with the "Lord of the Manor" northern roundabout.

The proposals also include the introduction of a 7.5 Tonne weight limit, except for access on Sandwich Road from a point 40 metres south west of the mid point of its junction with the "Lord of the Manor" southern roundabout south westwards, to a point 65 metres north east of the mid point of its junction with "Ebbsfleet" roundabout.

The introduction of traffic calming measures is also included within the proposals. This will encourage drivers to maintain lower speeds within the area and to use the new routes unless requiring access to Cliffs End, or the adjoining minor roads.

Jacobs Engineering UK Ltd has been commissioned to work in partnership with the Kent County Council to progress the legal procedures necessary to implement the proposed measures.

A copy of the scheme proposal, an explanatory statement and a plan showing the extents of the scheme can be inspected during normal office hours at the Kent County Council Offices, Sessions House, County Road, Maidstone, Kent, ME14 1XQ, Thanet District Council Offices, PO Box 9, Cecil Street, Margate, Kent, CT9 1XZ, and affected Parish and Town Councils which are: Cliffsend PC, Manston PC and Ramsgate TC.

Anyone wishing to support these proposals, or object to them, should write to Diane Bourne, Jacobs Engineering UK Ltd, Miller House, Lower Stone Street, Maidstone, Kent, ME15 6GB, quoting the name of the Order and reference No ""B1425100" and stating their reasons, by no later than Monday 21st May 2012.

HISTORY WATCH

Thomas Becket

The first (and worst) Canterbury tale

THE publication of a biography using contemporary accounts of his life and death has shed new light on the martyred Archbishop of Canterbury Thomas Becket, writes Nick Ames.

Historian John Guy tells the story of Becket's rise to prominence and relationship with the man that history holds responsible for his murder – his one-time friend King Henry II.

Much of the emphasis of Thomas Becket: Warrior, Priest, Rebel, Victim is on Henry, a monarch whose inability to accept reality when it was in conflict with his own wishes seemed to verge on the insane.

The author, who will be lecturing on his work in the cathedral next month, also depicts the flaws in Becket's own character.

It shows a man who, to protect his own career prospects, refused to visit his former patron, the old Archbishop of Canterbury, on his deathbed.

It also shows a well-respected royal court member who quarrelled with the King over the trivial matter of a furred cloak and resigned from the chancellorship of England without consulting Henry first.

Guy points out that some of the accounts from which he draws came from men who knew Becket well but were written after his death at a time when calls to make him a saint were in full cry.

Becket's story is a well-known Kentish tale, and the contemporary evidence is extensive, so the facts are actually quite clear.

He was appointed first chancellor, then Archbishop of Canterbury, by Henry, who believed that he could rely on his old friend to support his policy of curbing the powers of the Church. But Becket stoutly defended the independence of the clerics and the supremacy of the papacy, in the face of an increasingly frustrated and angry king.

After many violent disputes, in December 1170 Henry's patience snapped. He is supposed to have cried out "Who will rid me of this turbulent priest?" – leading to four knights riding to Canterbury to slay Becket.

Hugh de Morville, Reginald FitzUrse, Richard le Breton and William de Tracy are believed to have stayed at Saltwood Castle before the murder and hid out at Tappington Hall, Denton, after their notorious deed.

The accounts of the monks present at the time paint the scene in gruesome detail as the knights leapt at the archbishop, slashing, hewing and stabbing with their swords.

Becket fell to his knees and offered his soul to God before the final blow, which sliced off the crown of his head.

The murder became the centre of a story of religion against state and a power struggle between two men convinced of their righteousness.

Becket's road to sainthood was fast. The remorseful king prostrated himself at his tomb, where miracles were reported to occur, and Becket was canonised swiftly, in 1173.

This was great news for Canterbury as the tombs of saints attracted crowds of pilgrims, bringing alms and trade with them.

Relics of the saint could be sold to carry his sanctity across Christendom – Becket was popular enough for many such dubious items to be on the market. Even at the time, critics asked whether there were enough small body parts or clothing to fill all the caskets supposedly containing his holy relics.

The Canterbury Tales by Chaucer further cemented Becket's place in history and, as the scene of his murder, Canterbury is the place most associated with him – although he studied in Paris and lived much of his life in London.

Christine Powell, who works at the cathedral, is an expert on Thomas Becket and said visitors were fascinated by his story.

Pope John Paul II and Archbishop Robert Runcie both prayed at the site of his murder on May 29, 1982, and a sculpture showing two ragged steel swords and a broken sword point that throw a shadow behind a bare stone altar are an impressive memorial.

Powell said: "The place where Becket was killed is now very different to how it would have looked in medieval times. We know the ceiling would have been very much lower and everything a lot darker, especially as the murder took place on a December evening.

"That would have been the case elsewhere in the building – there would have been a lot of places the archbishop could have successfully hidden if he had tried to."

His remains were entombed in Trinity Chapel

MURDER: Historian John Guy's new book tells the story of Thomas Becket, whose grisly death took place inside Canterbury Cathedral in 1220 with a separate repository for the top of his skull, cloven off by the slash of a sword. But in 1538, during the Reformation, the shrine was destroyed and the remains lost forever.

"It was destroyed on the orders of King Henry VIII after his split from the Roman Catholic Church," said Powell. "Henry had a special dislike for Becket, as he had stood against royalty.

"We know where the tomb was sited and there are still noticeable depressions in the marble floor caused by the number of pilgrims who had knelt to pray there. Also, one stained-glass window depicting Becket is still in existence – possibly it was hidden by the monks when Henry's heralds came to the cathedral.

"There are what are known as the Miracle Windows, which show people who made the pilgrimage being helped in ways such as being cured of the plague."

• Guy will be speaking in the nave of the cathedral on Tuesday, May 22, from 6.45pm-8.15pm. Rarely-seen artefacts will also be on display – tickets, from Canterbury Waterstones, cost £5. Thomas Becket: Warrior, Priest, Rebel, Victim is published by Viking, priced £25.

An Indian restaurant that's (still) at the top of its game

SOME five years ago, I wrote in the forerunner to these pages that in a list of 10 things to do before you die, eating a lamb dhansak from the Minster Tandoori should feature somewhere near the top.

Since then, some have questioned such an admittedly extravagant claim, but such was the impression this wondrous place had made on me that I was genuinely moved to such praise.

And so it was, that after a long and gruelling day in the office, a return visit called loud and clear. Could the standard, set so high all that time ago, have been maintained?

At least one of the same cheery faces was present, and it belonged to the always-smiling gentleman who now manages the place.

The welcome was as warm as it ever was. It is an undoubted pleasure to be greeted with a personal hallo and handshake... and a sure sign that an establishment is well and truly ensconced in village life.

Which the Minster Tandoori clearly is, as the number of people who had elected to head there on a rainy Monday evening – so often the graveyard shift at many restaurants, some of which don't even bother opening at such a time – demonstrated.

Pappadums with chutneys and fresh, crisp vegetables got me under way. Excellent, but let's launch into the real proof of the pudding – the main course (do please excuse the mixed metaphors).

Well, I suppose that if I was to test the precise comparative standard, I should revisit the lamb dhansak, but sometimes you just have to go where the eye and the palate take you... and on this occasion it was to 'Master Creations' (the Minster Tandoori is no place for understatement).

I elected for haash murchi – "sautéed duckling marinated in subtle spices... grilled then cooked with hot spice, chopped onions and fresh green chillies," the menu informed me.

Well, with such a write-up, wouldn't you?

I changed the standard accompaniment of pulao rice to mushroom rice and added sag aloo (potatoes cooked with spinach) and a keema nan (nan bread stuffed with minced lamb) to make, if I may be so bold, something of my own master creation.

Suffice to say, it worked gloriously, although to claim all the credit myself would be a little ungracious, now wouldn't it! Every element of the course was a delight, cooked to perfection and using spices as they are meant to be used.

The haash murchi was a new venture for me – and there aren't many such untrodden paths in the world of Indian cuisine – while the mushroom rice and sag aloo were flawless. Alongside all this was a fantastic keema nan – baked wonderfully and with superb meat that had not a trace of the cochineal overdose that so often spoils the experience elsewhere.

And the final conclusion? The Minster Tandoori is still there – right at the crown of the tree. This is a restaurant at the top of its game... and long may it stay so.

Art competition

PRIMARY-school children are invited to join one of the county's most exciting Olympic competitions in the countdown to London 2012.

The Create A Fruit & Veg Masterpiece Art Competition, backed by Archant KOS Media, is the brainchild of Produced in Kent, which is inviting all primary-school children to create a picture depicting London 2012 using real fruit and veg.

Only fruit and vegetables grown in Kent during the early summer can be used, and competitors simply need to take a photo of their picture and get it into the judges at events@producedinkent.co.uk before Monday, June 11.

A live final will be held at Broadview Gardens, Hadlow, on Friday, June 29. You can visit www.producedinkent.co.uk for more on the contest.

Taste of the old times in the country

THE pub on the green is one of the most typical scenes in British culture... and long may it continue to be so. And not far behind is the traditional barn-style alehouse standing alone out in the Kentish fields.

In winter a warm fire is often a centrepiece, while in the summer a fresh, warm breeze, thirst-quenching ales, wines and local juices combine to form a pure delight. But more than that, the country pub has become a place of fine dining and culinary expertise.

It is a meeting place where you can relax as well as have fun, and it's a place to celebrate weddings or remember those who have left us.

It is a fact that Kent's eateries are now attracting top chefs with Michelin-star experience. In the last couple of years, renowned chefs have headed to the hosteleries of Kent to carve out new centres of foody excellence, often choosing the more rural locations to kick-start their culinary campaigns.

Our rolling hills, leafy villages and fields of produce provide the perfect place for these experts to pick and choose from the best local ingredients and bring them to our plates.

Take a stroll, build your appetite and take in the sights and smells Kent has to offer before you taste it, too.

There are so many of these eateries dotted about our delightful downs, mysterious marshes and beautiful beaches, it is almost impossible to know where to start.

So just in case you're new to the area, or just looking for something a little different, we offer here six of the best...

The Acorn Birchington

Why here...

London Beach Tenterden

Why here...

The London Beach offers one of the best à la carte menus in the county. The menus change on a regular basis but stick to the principle of serving only Kentish produce. The sophisticated and classy restaurant has a relaxed ambience with beautiful panoramic views across the Weald of Kent. Deep in the rolling hills of countryside, this gem has something to offer every palate.

On the menu...

Start your meal with local game terrine, home-made chutney and toasted pistachio nuts. Follow with pan-roasted venison steak with puy lentils, fondant potato, braised red cabbage and mustard jus. You can top off a meal with steamed syrup-sponge pudding with vanilla crème Anglaise.

Well-run family pub with good food, drinks and a friendly, relaxed atmosphere. All ages are welcome; in fact in the garden there is a mini family farm with chickens, rabbits and a miniature pig.

On the menu...

The home-cooked food menu covers all tastes, with simple light bites to the ever-popular traditional Sunday roast, the Thai fishcakes or the Waggon burger... handmade with Angus Scotch beef.

World's Wonder Warehorne

Why here...

The World's Wonder sits in a beautiful area of countryside and offers a true rural eating experience. The pub is just a short walk from Romney Marsh, sitting between Hamstreet and Tenterden. It has a more modern-looking façade these days, but hiding behind it is a history that reaches back more than a century. A glorious fusion of modern and traditional!

On the menu...

The food is both cooked on the premises and sourced locally, with free-range meat and poultry all supplied by a local farmer. All dishes are home-made for a fresh taste, including the famous steak-and-kidney pie as well as popular rabbit-and-bacon pie. Vegetarian options are available

The Black Pig Staple

Why here...

Funky gibbon raises hopes A special birth

ONE of the most endangered species in the world has received a boost with the birth of a Javan gibbon at Howletts, Wild Animal Park. Just 50 individuals are in captivity outside Indonesia, half of which are at Howletts and sister park Port Lympne, near Hythe. Categorised on the IUCN Red List, it is estimated that as few as 2,500 mature individuals remain in their natural habitat. Primate chief Matt Ford said: "We are all delighted with our latest arrival to this group of Javan gibbons. Mum is very experienced and her baby boy is doing well."

The Javan gibbon is the most at-risk of the gibbon species, with hunting and deforestation contributing to the decline of the wild population. Ford said: "We house 11 males and 13 females between the two parks. "With 25 viable births since 1988, we are the world's most successful breeder of this species."

EATING OUT

Across the county

Family pub has music, culture and good food

THE Waggon at Hale is an independent, family-run business that prides itself on giving all guests a warm welcome.

You can dine in the formal restaurant for lunch, evening meals and the very popular Sunday roast, or you can relax on a comfy sofa in front of the fire and enjoy a drink, a snack or indeed something more substantial from the bar menu.

The progressive pub hosts many events throughout the year, from wine-tasting to gourmet meals and quiz nights to live music.

The team prides itself on being family-friendly, offering a warm and welcoming atmosphere to all customers; there is a wide range of real ales and wine. But the unique feature is a small animal farm with rabbits, guinea pigs, chickens and the star of the show, Crackling the micro-pig, for guests to meet.

Renowned for good, honest, home-cooked British pub grub, the Waggon uses locally-sourced produce, with a sprinkling of popular world dishes. On Wednesday, May 16, the Waggon will feature South African gourmet meals including a six-course dinner with matching wine for only £29.99. Then, on Saturday, May 26, there will be live music with JacuzziSoup.

PERFECT SETTING:

Whether you want a family meal or a romantic dinner, The Barge is the ideal place to eat out if you want a change from the norm

A meal on the river is an adventure for taste buds

OPPORTUNITIES to try something different don't come along all that often, so a meal on The Barge in Maidstone should be grabbed with both hands.

Don't worry, you won't have to hoist the mainsail or scrub the deck – just sit back, relax and enjoy some of the best food Kent has to offer.

As the only floating restaurant in the county, there is a perfect opportunity to try something a bit different at a fantastic river location with historic architecture all around.

The eatery offers 80 covers split over two rooms, with a quayside view and a spectacular additional 60 covers for relaxed alfresco dining during the warm spring and summer evenings.

The Barge can boast a brigade of Michelin-trained chefs who specialise in using produce from around both Kent and Sussex.

The relaxed setting allows for special barbecue events out in the alfresco area of the restaurant as well as along the riverside – something that is a bit special for diners.

One of the best things about the venue is that it is the perfect choice for a light, bright family meal with loved ones and also an intimate setting for a couple's romantic dinner date.

The Barge is open for lunch between Tuesday and Saturday, mid-day to 2.30pm for the last seating. Lunch on Sunday is between mid-day and 3pm.

During the evenings the restaurant is open Tuesday to Saturday from 8pm-9.30pm. Weather permitting, there will be outdoor barbecue days on Saturdays and Sundays throughout the summer.

BLOOMERS Restaurant at The Overcliffe Hotel in Gravesend is a rare gem that should not be missed.

Established in 1980, it is one of the best-kept secrets in Kent, offering excellent food and an ambience second to none.

The bar, restaurant and conservatory are all candlelit at night, giving the place a dreamlike quality – ideal for that very special meal with the most important person in your life.

On most Saturdays the resident pianist will serenade diners on the grand piano, performing an excellent selection of music to suit every mood and provide light entertainment for diners.

This relaxing experience can be added to as diners sit back with a perfectly-chilled glass of Champagne or an expertly-mixed cocktail in the bright conservatory.

You can also choose from the first-class menu and extensive wine list. Drinks can be served alfresco in the garden as spring and summer roll up.

In previous years those who have enjoyed the atmosphere at Bloomers form an impressive roll-call, including former Prime Minister Tony Blair, top performers such as Gerry and the Pacemakers, Rick Wakeman and Freddie Starr.

Bloomers is open to non-residents for dinner each evening, but to make the experience complete why not book a room and stay over at the fabulous hotel?

It is ideally situated for a short walk into the town centre; the local railway station is nearby; and Ebbsfleet International station can have you on the Continent in no time.

The food and the atmosphere on any night out at Bloomers is tough to beat anywhere in Kent.

AFTER its sell-out production of La Traviata in Broadstairs last month, Kent-based The Merry Opera Company will perform its moving and unusual staged production of Handel's Messiah.

The group tends to do things a little differently, moving away from traditions such as static soloists and huge choirs reading music. Instead, the show features a cast of just 12 singers and a lot more stage direction.

The production is expected to be of high quality, following the highly-rated La Traviata performances that attracted opera fans from across the county.

Tickets cost £10 in advance and £12 on the day.

THE paintings of Roland Collins have gone on show at Mascalls Gallery in Paddock Wood almost 75 years after the artist first exhibited a work in the Royal Academy Summer Exhibition. Collins, now 93, is known for his landscape paintings and the new exhibition displays a piece featuring the Old Neptune pub on Whitstable seafront.

The artist has found the coast of Kent and Sussex a fruitful landscape for painting and for a time he owned a cottage in Whitstable, from where he explored the region.

The exhibition in Paddock Wood includes paintings of Newhaven, Rye, Gravesend and Northfleet. It will be open until Saturday, June 30. Check online for opening hours.

MAIDSTONE Museum has opened its new Japanese gallery after a visit from a very special guest. Ambassador Keiichi Hayashi cut the ribbon to the exhibition, which takes pride of place in the museum's recently-completed East Wing. The envoy was joined by Lord and Lady Bearsted and Nicholas and Caroline Samuel in a ceremony identical to one that opened the original Japanese Gallery at the museum way back in 1924. It was 88 years to the day that then-Japanese ambassador Baron Hyashi met Maidstone dignitaries to open the Lady Bearsted Wing. The museum, in St Faith Street, has one of the UK's finest collections of Japanese Edo-period art and the new gallery will display a selection of the 3,000-piece collection.

Rattan: the furniture for all seasons

By Gary Wright

EVERYONE wants their garden to look great and everyone has their own ideas about planting and layout, but getting just the right seating to enjoy it can be just as daunting.

The Great British Home Show 2012 at Kent's new £62 million exhibition centre Glow, at Bluewater, has a huge section of the lower level devoted to gardens – and among the unique designs especially for the show will be a host of great furniture.

Rattan has become one of the biggest trends for 2012, offering everything from loungers and day-beds to formal dining sets and armchairs that look beautiful, are comfortable and, most importantly, are hard-wearing.

Among the leaders in the field is Oceans Outdoor Furniture, which will be displaying its full range of PE Rattan outdoor garden furniture, including some of the most luxurious outdoor chairs and tables on the market.

For relaxing, the Puerto Rico sofa set is beautifully presented and available in four colours.

It is versatile yet compact and the chaise end has been designed in both left- and right-handed configuration and the combination set comes in two sofa pieces and is complemented with a practical coffee table.

COMFY SET-UP: Rattan furniture has become one of the biggest trends this year, being both comfortable and hard-wearing

The Puerto Rico garden sofa seats five people or more comfortably, while it is also perfect for the intimate couple with their feet up, sipping drinks or maybe just catching up on some favourite reading.

It is available in four line black, coffee, mocha and latte PE Rattan

Full dining table sets start at £499, but the Deluxe Cube Dining Set is a classic that would be difficult to equal anywhere; simple, compact and designed by Oceans, it is the height of opulence and luxury and will complement your outdoor space perfectly.

The Rattan garden furniture set will seat up to 10 people and comes complete with a 10-seat garden dining table with a 5mm tempered clear-glass top, six chairs with seat and back cushions, six footstools with seat cushions and a durable weather cover. Additional covers are as an optional extra in charcoal, red or lemon.

The show will also feature the timeless contemporary design of the Bermuda Sofa Set – the perfect way to bring your garden furniture up to date and extend your living space.

This relaxing sofa set comprises two armchairs with seat and back cushions, a luxurious three-seat sofa with seat and back cushions and a coffee table and side table both furnished with 5mm tempered clear-glass table-tops and a weather cover.

■ Oceans will be displaying at The Great British Home Show 2012 on the lower level in the Great British Gardens section and you can find out more about the show at www.gbhomeshow.co.uk. Readers can also get two tickets for the show by ordering online and entering the code KOS1.

Enjoy wide open space of an orangery

THE orangery is becoming one of the top choices for home improvement in 2012, offering an elegant extension that brings your home and garden together.

An orangery is a brick building with a glass roof, many windows and pillars for support and decoration; it has become a popular alternative to a traditional conservatory.

They became popular in Britain between the 17th and 19th centuries in fashionable houses as places to grow citrus trees and exotic plants, first gaining popularity in Italy during the 1600s when technology advanced and artisans were able to produce large sheets of clear glass.

Suddenly, architecture changed and architects designed big, clear roofs to harness the sun's rays to take full advantage and grow fruit and plants, sometimes putting in a stove to heat the room throughout winter.

With their beautifully-designed pillars and fashioned brick corbelling, it is no wonder that they became a symbol of status – French King Louis XIV built the biggest orangery in Europe to show off his wealth and importance.

That was more than 300 years ago, but in the 21st century, as people want more traditional-looking houses, the orangery was revisited by architects as it offers a unique structure that complements the home but sets it apart.

The Great British Home Show 2012 at Glow, Bluewater, from Thursday, May 31, to Monday, June 4, will have a fully-constructed orangery at the show next month by Anglian Home Improvements, which has led the way since revealing its range of orangeries six months ago.

Anglian builds each orangery according to the home, ensuring architectural features are matched or reflected in the finished extension, including the types of windows and matching the stone or brick of the house, and it will install bi-fold doors for the finishing touch – if that's what the customer wants.

But it is not just the external design that makes these 21st-century orangeries unique – the interior is bang up to date and designed with each owner's requirements in mind.

and the wall, there is a space, almost like a parapet, meaning the homeowner can tailor the new room by adding features like ceiling lights, which can set the mood for dinner parties or a relaxing evening with a glass of wine.

For homeowners who love to unwind listening to music, they can install concealed speakers into this space so that they immerse themselves in the sounds while relaxing in a comfortable chair and looking out across the garden.

By choosing to have an Anglian orangery, householders are able to give their property an extra space in a luxurious manner, matching traditional styles with contemporary living, making the orangery a 21st-century building.

Orangeries make an exceptional extension to a home, giving beautiful views into the garden from a lovely warm room, and one that owners will most definitely be proud to show to their friends, family and neighbours.

Anglian Home Improvements and The Great British Home Show 2012 is proud the company has chosen to sponsor the show at Glow.

You can find out more about the show at www.gbhomeshow.co.uk.

Readers can get two tickets for the show by ordering their tickets online and entering the code KOS1.

Growing demand for your attention

Lucy Hewett gets to grips with the million and one jobs clamouring to be tackled this month

LUCY'S PATCH

by LUCY HEWETT

HEADLESS and chicken are definitely the words for this time of year. The problem is starting and then finishing a job without getting distracted by something in the corner of your eye screaming 'I need some attention – what about me?!'.

This is where I envy a man's ability to be able to concentrate on and, without being distracted, finish a job... or perhaps that's just my man?

What a lovely time of year, though. I defy anyone to not feel invigorated with the bulbs and blossom bursting into life everywhere.

But where to start? So much to do and so little time, my mum always says. Just do a little every day – if you only have 30 minutes, just attack and complete one job. For instance, one day, I repotted those pot-bound agapanthus that had desperately been needing repotting for three years – I had achieved something.

The next day, I weeded a small section of my veg patch; next day, I sowed a few seeds... the list started to get a few ticks on it. Admittedly, I would have rewritten it out and added a few new jobs to mine as soon as it had any ticks on it, but that's just me. My list seems to grow quicker than my garden and anyway what would I do with myself if I ever completed it?

I'm working on an exciting new project this month. I'm helping plan the revamp of the garden at a new pub involved with Richard Phillips – The Windmill Inn at Hollingbourne. It has a lovely big garden that we want to make into a nice place to come and spend time with your family. So I will be giving that attention before the reopening, planned for the end May.

Anyway, the jobs to do this month... Hoe Preferably do this on dry days as weeds will die off and wilt quickly. Hoeing is great as it covers a large area quickly and saves your back.

Make sure your hoe is sharp and just slide it back slightly below the surface of the soil. Mulching beds will help to eliminate weeds and conserve moisture.

Roses Tie in climbing roses. If you bend over any upright stem, you will get flowers along the stem instead of just at the top. Now is also a good time to plant roses.

Lavenders Trim off any old flowers with secateurs, but don't prune into old wood.

Dahlia and gladioli Plant corms now – you will be grateful of that glorious display of colour later in the season.

Prune Early flowering shrubs like berberis, forsythia and spiraea should be pruned immediately after flowering. Also prune less hardy shrubs like ceanothus, fuchsia and hydrangea.

Lawn You will probably be mowing quite regularly now – apply a feed and treat weeds or moss.

Sow grass seed, or lay turf on prepared soil.

What to sow:

Flower seeds Marigolds, poppies, dill and cerinthe. You can start to harden off any seedlings you have already sown outside now.

Veg If you are unsure if the ground is ready to plant, feel it. If it feels warm to touch or sit on, then that's a good indicator that it's ready.

If in doubt, cover it with fleece for a week or so before planting – the small rise in temperature can make a big difference. Sow direct: carrots, peas, beetroot, broad beans, spinach and chard; also pumpkins, squash, sweetcorn, basil and French beans. Keep an eye on the weather and fleece any small seedlings if it turns colder.

You can get some salad started in your greenhouse, conservatory or on a warm windowsill. I like to follow Sarah Raven's tip for this by sowing seeds on to damp compost in strips of guttering that we have cut into metre-lengths.

Once the seedlings are established, you can just slide the whole lot out into the prepared ground without disturbing the fragile roots.

Try corn salad, mizuna, rocket, winter purslane, mustard and plenty of lettuces. Then make a note of the date and sow another load in three-to four-week intervals to keep a continuous crop all summer long.

Plant maincrop potatoes – I usually do this around Easter. Start pulling the soil up around the developing shoots of early-sown potatoes.

Fruit Strawberries can be planted out now. It's best to remove flowers in the first year as you conserve strength for growth and gain larger crops in subsequent years.

A good layer of compost around the base of fruit trees will be giving them the nutrition they need for good cropping.

Herbs Chervil, chives and coriander can be sown direct; dill, fennel and French sorrel under cover.

Slugs and snails will be coming out in the warmer, wetter weather and can eat entire rows of seedlings overnight, so take action now by using a slug-controller before you get overrun.

Buy a bug box This will encourage helpful insects such as ladybirds, lacewings and bees into your garden, providing them with a bug box to give them somewhere to shelter or hibernate. This will help boost the balance between beneficial insects and pests.

The other day as we were giving my daughter Rosie's tree-house a spring-clean, there were hundreds of lacewings and ladybirds in there – she wasn't too pleased when I said she wasn't allowed to sweep them out.

By the time you read this, I will have run the Virgin London Marathon, which I am doing to raise money for Age UK, so after that I should hopefully have a bit less time running and a bit more time gardening!

Lissy Scarlett finds out about a growing property trend

WHILE London continues to blaze a trail at the head of the residential property market, England's cathedral cities have experienced a recent surge in popularity and are drawing prospective purchasers away from the capital.

Connells estate agency has reported an exponential increase in house sales and enquiries in both Canterbury and its surrounds, placing Kent at the forefront of this upsurge. Given the cultural and historical riches that Kent's cities have to offer, it is no surprise that these idylls of English living are proving so popular.

Sales at Berkeley's riverside development of Kingsbrook Park in Canterbury, for example, have already exceeded targets in the first quarter of 2012 and – judging by enquiries, on-site visitors and reservations – the second quarter looks set to experience similar levels of success.

In addition to Canterbury, and of course not forgetting Rochester, feedback shows that the Cotswolds, East Anglia and the South West have all enjoyed a significant proportion of the house sales across the UK.

Tina Dedman, sales and marketing director at Berkeley, said: "Our figures reflect confidence in the South East's property market and are indicative of the desirability of Kent's oldest city, Canterbury.

"Our Kingsbrook Park development is proving popular with both Kent residents and buyers from further afield. We believe this is because it offers a range of apartments to suit all tastes, as well as being able to boast possibly the only Georgian-style crescent houses in the city."

With Canterbury famed for being home to one of the oldest cathedrals in England, Berkeley believes that prospective buyers at Kingsbrook Park are instantly attracted to the convenience and low maintenance of a new-build property located in such close proximity to a site of historical and literary importance.

Furthermore, a significant number of buyers are moving to Canterbury from London, according to Antony Ludkins, manager at Connells Canterbury, who attributes this in part to the city's affordability combined with its transport links. He said: "Prospective purchasers who visit Canterbury from London are always astonished by how far their money stretches.

"Residents of Canterbury benefit from excellent road links, and central London is easily reachable by train. This gives them a winning combination – being able to live in a more affordable city coupled with the benefits of an accessible location. Canterbury's residents are also direct beneficiaries of the cultural advantages of living in a historic city that has an incredibly strong arts scene."

High-quality new-build developments are certainly drawing people to the area, and the homes at Kingsbrook Park showcase an architectural attention to detail that resonates throughout Canterbury. Compared with other cathedral cities such as Winchester, Canterbury offers far greater value for money.

However, the key elements that attract house-buyers to cathedral cities remain consistent, and with a historic cathedral and listed buildings alongside a great shopping district, complete with bars and bistros, Canterbury very much exemplifies all that is charming about such historic cities. Furthermore, with two well-regarded universities within the city, the centre is buzzing with activity, while being close to the coast offers an accessible change of scenery.

Although both Canterbury's and Rochester's housing markets are dominated by domestic buyers, there is evidence that foreign investors are also finding the cathedral cities irresistible.

Connells Canterbury office has had buyers from Hong Kong and Australia investing in this popular city, indicating that as a World Heritage Site it commands interest from the international market.

Both cathedral cities feature prolifically across the internet, magazines, newspapers and books internationally, which is only set to prompt further international inquiries and subsequent sales.

Equally, with an ever-increasing student population in the city, Canterbury itself is set to become a hotbed of house-purchasing activity in the long term, from both investor parents and students who put roots down in the historic location.

Home to first-rate grammar schools, Canterbury and Rochester are particularly attractive to families. Older buyers are also catered for with some excellent amenities, and retail and leisure services are consolidated in often vibrant high streets.

Tina Dedman concluded: "Canterbury caters for all of the requirements of prospective residents across all levels, attracting young professionals, families, the mature worker and the retired alike, reinforcing precisely why cathedral cities are beginning to rival the capital in terms of popularity among house-buyers."

Policy focuses on needs for the over-60s

THE next five years could see a significant increase in the building of specialist housing designed for the over-60s following the publication of the new National Planning Policy Framework (NPPF).

In the framework there is, for the first time, an obligation on local authorities to build into their local development plans provision for housing for the elderly.

Local authorities will have to reflect the present and future demographic mix of the population when considering their local housing needs over the next five to 15 years. As the population continues to age, the need for the provision of specialist housing for those over 60 becomes even greater.

Churchill Retirement Living, which specialises in retirement apartments, has welcomed the importance the policy has placed on specialist housing.

Planning director Andrew Burgess said: "We see the new framework as a positive move and are particularly pleased to see the specific clauses putting the onus on local authorities to reflect future demographics when drawing up their local plans.

"Moving to an apartment specifically designed for independent older people can reduce the pressures of looking after a big house. We now expect to see this need specifically referenced in local plans throughout the country."

Owning your dream home may be just a NewBuy away

THERE is now an opportunity for home-hunters to take advantage of the NewBuy scheme at Leybourne Chase, Taylor Wimpey's development in Kent.

Whether they are first-time buyers or have a property to sell, prospective purchasers can secure selected homes at Leybourne Chase under this Government-backed initiative with a 95 per cent mortgage and 5 per cent deposit.

The scheme is intended as a helping hand for those who are struggling to save a large deposit for their first home, as well as for homeowners with limited equity in their current property.

NewBuy is available with new properties up to £500,000, and with prices at Leybourne Chase starting at just £179,995 for a two-bedroom apartment, purchasers may only require a deposit of just £9,000.

Meanwhile, three-bedroom homes are priced from just £249,995, with four-bedroom properties only £294,995 and five-bedroom detached houses from £489,995.

Fiona Creed, regional sales and marketing director for Taylor Wimpey, said: "We're urging home-hunters to take advantage now of NewBuy, which is helping people get moving."

"They no longer need to spend years saving a hefty deposit but can move into the home of their dreams sooner than they thought possible."

temporary fitted kitchen and a guest cloakroom off the entrance hallway.

Upstairs, the landing leads to the en-suite master bedroom, a comfortable guest bedroom, a third bedroom and a family bathroom.

The development forms part of the Hospital Sites Programme, which is bringing 96 former hospital sites back into productive use.

As well as working with Taylor Wimpey to develop the site, the programme provides funding to ensure new and affordable homes are available for the local community.

Almost two-thirds of the development site – some 140 acres – is being preserved as open space for recreation and leisure, including parks, recreation grounds, fields, children's playgrounds, sports pitches, 'trim trail' footpaths, community allotments, a lake and an arboretum.

MAYBE even BMW didn't realise what it had when it exited the Rover Group shambles in 2000 with the Mini brand tucked under its arm.

The failed rescue may have cost the German premium marque millions, but it saved what has proved to be an invaluable asset.

Just a year later, BMW launched its first homage to the 1960s original and has since created five spin-offs, all visibly linked to the mainstay hatchback model: the Clubman (estate), Convertible, Countryman (SUV/4x4), Coupé and now, the newly-launched Roadster – most being produced at Cowley in Oxford.

A further derivative, the Paceman or Countryman Coupé, is also expected next year, and it's even possible we could get a stripped-out jeep-like version, inspired by the Mini Moke (1964-89) and a booted Mini in the style of the 1961-69 Wolseley Hornet/Riley Elf – BMW still owns the Riley name.

For now, we can laud yet another potential star in the new Roadster (from £18,020) based on the Coupé.

As you would expect from the Roadster label, it's a open-top two-seater, compared with the four-up yet similar-sized Convertible, giving it extra stowage behind the passengers as well a 240-litre boot that can also be extended into the cabin – the Convertible offers 125 with seats up.

As with the Coupé, launched last year, all versions wear the sporty Cooper name, starting with the entry model and progressing to the Cooper S (£20,905), diesel-powered Cooper SD (£21,630) and flagship John Cooper Works (£24,860).

Expect many owners to spend even more on the many Mini customising options.

The Roadster also looks the part: the windscreen pillars are more dramatically raked and the roofline 20mm lower than the Convertible, while the profile is less awkward than the Coupé, which, for all its handling prowess, looks as though a giant foot has modified the roof.

The Roadster's canvas roof folds flat behind the seats to deliver a racy top-down profile and, presumably, escape the pram jibes that some soft-tops attract. The interior is familiar with retro yet comfy sports seats and a large central circular speedo, the rev counter behind the steering wheel and toggle switchgear.

The powertrains are well known, too, with fuel consumption and CO2 emissions aided by BMW's EfficientDynamics technology, starting with the 122bhp 1.6-litre that delivers 0-62mph in 9.2 seconds with an average mpg in the mid-40s.

As with other Mini derivatives, though, many buyers will focus on the diesel: the 143bhp 2.0-litre unit delivers 0-62mph in 8.1 seconds and should average around 60mpg.

However, some buyers will argue that a Roadster should be about go-kart performance, so the Cooper S (0-62mph in seven seconds) or JCW (6.5 seconds) will be in their sights.

OPEN FOR BUSINESS:

BMW's new incarnation for the Mini – the Roadster – is sure to be a head-turner on the UK's roads with its sharp lines and lower roofline as well as retro sports seats and comfy interior

DON'T LIKE

... the look with roof up. It's better than the squashed profile of its Coupé sister but looks dumpy against the classical Mazda MX-5.

NOT SURE

... there will be many takers over and above the more practical four-seat Mini Convertible, though almost twice the boot space might sway some.

REALLY LIKE

... the marketing behind the car. With a Paceman/Countryman Coupé in the offing, will BMW add yet more Mini spin-offs?

PEUGEOT has revealed that its all-new three- and five-door eco-friendly 208 supermini – the latest in a famous line – will be priced from an aggressive £9,995 and well equipped when it goes on sale in June.

Significantly, it will also be available on the French marque's innovative 'Just Add Fuel' monthly consumer lease programme, recently extended to drivers aged from 21 years.

Skoda top for Driver Power

Its Yeti SUV, pictured, took the top spot, the Superb family saloon/hatchback came second, and the middleweight Octavia was fourth – virtually a re-run of last year.

It was also the fourth year running the VW-owned brand was voted best manufacturer in the influential poll.

...and Brits not too bad, either

BRITISH-built models also fared well in the Driver Power survey, with Nissan's Sunderland-produced Juke mini-crossover/SUV topping the in-car technology section and the Qashqai crossover coming fourth in it.

Both models also did well in the Driver Power Top 15, finishing 13th and sixth respectively, though the top Brit motor was Jaguar's elegant XF (fifth), pictured.

Seductive new Aveo all set to lift Chevrolet's standing in UK

By Sam Davison

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

CHEVROLET'S first Aveo supermini was a bits-and-pieces car, first seeing life as the Daewoo Kalos before gaining the Chevy nose and a new name late on.

It was cheap but easily outclassed. Its successor is affordable and Korean-built, too, yet cannot be dismissed so lightly, showing that Chevrolet is getting serious about competing in the UK and Europe.

Rivals at the bargain-basement end of the supermini sector will be feeling the pressure – especially the French marques and fellow Korean-built models.

Even before buyers have noted the tempting £9,995 price and decent spec, they may have been seduced by the Aveo's looks.

Offered only as a five-door, it still manages a rakish coupé-style enhanced by concealed rear-door handles and a rising crease line on the lower flanks.

To complement the distinctive Chevrolet split grille, it also wears twin-pod chromed headlights rather than the fully-glazed front lighting that is the norm.

It really makes the car stand out, while the interior has its own distinctions with a motor-cycle-inspired cluster of dials and gauges and two jet-intake-style air vents on the dashboard, plus many clever storage points including two gloveboxes.

A long wheelbase helps deliver a good ride and allows an airy cabin, with exceptional rear head and legroom and width – there's also a deep boot that expands into a big cargo area with one or all three rear seats folded.

However, as you might expect of a value champion, the plastics used inside are tough rather than classy; preferable, though, to the sometimes shiny and easily-scratched materials on the previous Kalos/Aveo.

Typically, Chevrolet's low asking prices don't

AMERICAN DREAM:

Not only does the Chevrolet Aveo look good but it is sure to become a favourite in the competitive supermini sector... bad news for rival French and Korean brands short-change on features: even LS entry trim comes with air-con, cruise control, electric and heated door mirrors, electric front windows and six airbags – contributing to a maximum five-star EuroNCAP safety rating.

Mid-spec LT trim (from £10,995) gets you into alloys, steering wheel audio controls and more, while flagship LTZ (from £12,195) is luxurious, and all come with Chevrolet's five-year/100,000-mile warranty.

On top of all this, though, the Aveo is a decent drive, which won't harm the brand's aim to target younger buyers who demand value for fun.

The car's all-new chassis feels taut on the road yet not at the expense of ride quality, while cabin noise is low for this class.

All engines are new, economical and hard to fault: the 85bhp 1.2-litre entry-level petrol model is the best-seller but feels slightly underpowered – keen drivers will prefer the 99bhp 1.4-litre (from £12,375) petrol.

The stand-out engine, though, is the 1.3-litre diesel, available with 74bhp and 94bhp outputs and five- or six-speed box. It's smooth, refined and economical (from £12,345) and even available as a road tax-beating LT Ecodiesel model (£12,795). The latter was our test car and wears its green credentials well, being quite lively and cruising comfortably on motorways.

At a modest £400 or so more compared with the lower-output version and an official combined fuel consumption of 78.4 against 74.3mpg, it looks a good call, though both versions have low-enough CO2 emissions to escape road tax.

There is also a six-speed auto option for the 1.4 petrol model, but the changes are rather jerky.

Nevertheless, along with the slightly low rent interior – surely something Chevy will tackle at facelift time – it is one of the few things that this bold new Chevrolet supermini can be criticised for.

It bodes well for its competitiveness in what has become one of the toughest UK motor sectors as buyers drive to downsize.

Chinese invasion starts from Great Wall

By Sam Davison

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

CAN'T help noting that the first of many Chinese motor brands tipped to invade the UK is named after the Great Wall of China – apparently built to resist invasions.

More worrying, though, is that Great Wall Motors is less than 40 years old and was only allowed to build trucks until 2008 yet has since become China's biggest producer of SUVs.

However, it has chosen one of its other success stories, the Steed pick-up, to establish an invasion beachhead.

With a starting price of just £13,998 for the standard four-door cab, after the usual commercial vehicle-tax deductions, it won't struggle – similarly-equipped rivals cost thousands more.

Apart from that aggressive pricing, it's also shrewd to launch a brand with a pick-up; worries about depreciation with an unknown name can be largely discounted as real-world buyers tend to run them into the ground and then go again.

The Steed certainly looks robust enough to handle workhorse environments like construction or farming, while a large load-area plus four-door/five-seat cab means it's versatile, too.

The reinforced cargo bay is 1,380mm long, 1,460mm wide and 480mm deep and the maximum payload is 1,050kg, while the Steed will tow 2,000kg with a 'braked' trailer and 750kg unbraked.

Great Wall claims that the vehicle's gutsy 2.0-litre turbodiesel offers class-leading fuel economy

– 34mpg on the official combined cycle – and the lowest insurance rating (from 7A) in the pick-up sector. When the terrain gets more challenging, the driver can engage the low-range gearbox as well as 'on demand' four-wheel-drive – the latter at speeds of up to 12mph.

Within the keen pricing, Great Wall includes an astonishing range of standard kit. The Steed S entry model has 16-inch alloys, remote central locking, Thatcham-approved Category 1 alarm, electric windows, sound system with USB/MP3 and Bluetooth connectivity, steering-wheel audio controls, air-con, heated front seats and full leather interior.

For £2,000 more, the Steed SE flagship gains body-coloured hard-top canopy and spoiler, extra chrome trim, black roof rails, load bay liner and rear parking sensors.

RUGBY LEAGUE

Disney films and theme parks; just a normal day for a Super League star

By Greg Miles

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

IF there are two things to know about London Broncos' Kent-born star Tony Clubb, it's that his favourite film is The Little Mermaid, and he is looking forward to spending a lot of time on the children's rides at Chessington World of Adventures in the future.

They're not exactly the first things that spring to mind when you think of a strapping lad like 6ft 2inch Clubb, who will be bringing his Super League team mates to Gillingham's Priestfield Stadium for a league match against Hull FC in May.

Admittedly the first might be down to a prank by whoever edits the Broncos' official website, but the second is true for the 24-year-old who lives near the Surrey theme park, as he is expecting his first child in the next few weeks.

"I have never watched the Little Mermaid," he said. "I think someone is pulling my leg."

Rollercoaster isn't a word that you would choose to describe Clubb's career, but the whole concept of rugby league is one that certainly came out of the blue for the man from Gravesend who has been a regular in the Broncos side making 127 appearances to date.

"To be honest with you I didn't know what rugby league was," he said. "One of my friends I played union with played league. He said 'come and try this sport' I went along to a few training sessions and I absolutely loved it."

"You can run as hard and as fast as you want, your job is just to give it to them, it's a good professional sport.

"When I was younger I was a winger and I just stood there on the wing not really doing much and getting cold. In league I got involved a lot."

Thankfully he has wised up to what the game is all about since his first days in a league shirt as a 13-year-old.

He has been at Broncos for the past seven seasons, and has also represented England for whom he is just one of ten players to have ever scored four tries in one match, a feat he achieved against Papua New Guinea in 2010.

Looking back on his early days now he admits he never thought about doing anything other than playing rugby.

"I enjoyed playing for my local team Greenwich Admirals, I just enjoyed playing rugby league, I never thought about anything else," he said.

"Every year I got asked to come back and play then the Broncos asked me to go over to France to do a pre-season tour for two weeks, once I came back they said they wanted to sign me for two years."

"I honestly don't know what else I would have done. I had barely just come out of school, I was going to college to do sports science."

"I have been quite blessed really. I have gone on to play for my country a few times."

He is one of very few southerners to embrace the game at a professional level, which is one of the reasons that his side will be playing at Priestfield on May 20 as the Super League experience is spread around the country and not confined to the capital or the north.

"I haven't been there for a long time, for many, many years," he said. "When I went there the other day I was pretty impressed by what they have got. It's a nice stadium."

He says it was a bit of a surprise to see first hand just how passionate northerners are about the sport, something he found out when making his debut for the Broncos as an 18-year-old against the Bradford Bulls.

"They go mental for the sport up there, it opens your eyes a bit," he said. "There are so many sports that you have got to compete with down here, slowly but surely I'm sure we will get there."

"It's going to take a lot of effort and a lot of time. I would like to see it take off."

"Hopefully in the next few years we can get a few more amateur teams."

One bonus of the fixture for Clubb is that at least his family and friends from Kent won't have to travel too to the other side of London to watch him play.

Promising start can only get better once players get to know each other

IT has been a promising start to life at Kent County Cricket Club for coach Jimmy Adams with his side currently unbeaten and riding high in the top half of the table, albeit after just three games.

The season opener against Yorkshire ended in a draw despite a dominant performance, then came the demolition of Northamptonshire thanks to 128 not out from Michael Powell, and some devastating bowling by youngster Matt Coles.

And last week's draw against Gloucestershire was salvaged somewhat because of the rain which stopped play across all four days, and a steady 32 not out from captain Rob Key in the second innings.

But it's a start he hopes the club, which is full of a number of newcomers like himself, can sustain for a successful season.

"I'm fairly happy with the way the things have gone," he said.

"We have had two first class hundreds and a couple of half centuries as well."

"In between the team performances and individual performances we have had a good start."

And the promising performances have come at a time the players are still getting to know one another after a flurry of arrivals in the spring.

"A lot of us have come together for the first time and it will probably be a few more months until we will know each other very well," said the former West Indies international.

Despite not knowing each other too well just yet, they are united in one feeling.

"I think everybody in the club would like to see us back in Division One, that's definitely what we are aiming towards," he said.

One thing he is hoping will help guide the side up the table is its experience.

He said: "The majority of our players have an understanding of first class cricket for quite a few seasons."

"I'm banking on that experience being put to good use."

"I think the players are pretty happy with themselves at the moment."

"A lot of the players have played for many years, they are a fairly motivated bunch, that makes my job easier."

The arrivals may not be over just yet, as Adams admits he might need to bring in some extra cover as the season goes on.

"It's a possibility," said the 44-year-old. "We might look at the possibility of an addition for the Twenty20 tournament. That's to be decided."

"We are looking at our options at the moment."

New Wells coach looking to youngsters for success

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

NURTURING young talent will be crucial to the future of Tunbridge Wells Cricket Club according to their new head coach Rob Ferley.

The former Kent, and Notts spinner has taken up the hot seat at the club with a view to developing the club's well-known youth set up, which he feels could do wonders for the club.

The opportunity came somewhat out of the blue for Ferley, but he admits he is looking forward to the challenge.

"To be honest I wasn't really looking to do anything," he said. "I sat down with Steven (chairman Steven Green) and we were trying to work out what was required. It got quite exciting."

"I thought it would be a challenge. I do quite a lot of stuff in terms of commercial coaching, but in terms of taking people on a journey, I haven't done that."

"I know they have some of the most exciting talent in Kent."

He feels if the players respond to the coaching in the right way then it will be a matter of time before the club is challenging for honours.

"If they play like they do in the nets then they would have a chance of winning the league, but cricket is not like that," he said.

"I think the main thing, is that of course we want to win the league and if we are not challenging within a couple of years we are not doing our jobs correctly."

"The players need to show they can improve

ON TOUR: Some of the club's young talent went on the pre-season tour to South Africa with the direction we have given them. It's a case of suck it and see."

Club stalwart Fulton Paterson helped organise the pre-season trip to South Africa, and hopes it will benefit everyone involved.

He said: "We had a very happy tour there, we established very good contacts and I hope there will be some development between the clubs.

"I hope the boys will have learnt some very different aspects of the game and of life."

"We are very grateful to Burrells the jewellers for being the main sponsor to support the trip."

"It was a great place to go and see as well as to play cricket."

Need to win play-off match greater than ever for TJs

TONBRIDGE Juddians are hoping to make it four promotions in four years this weekend in their winner-takes-all play-off game against Chinnor.

TJs travel to Oxfordshire on Saturday knowing that a win will book themselves a place in National League 2 South East.

They made it to the play-offs by the skin of their teeth in a game they couldn't afford to lose, with an 8-8 draw against third placed Amphyll last Saturday.

First team coach Peter Dankert: "We are very much looking forward to it."

"Chinnor have done very well in their league and scored a lot of points."

"They have made the play-offs relatively easier than we did."

"We know we are going to be under pressure from a very good outfit."

"First of all we must not relax, this is going to be just as hard possibly not as physical, but a more open game of rugby."

He said that it is a great season to get promoted because of the quality of the sides coming into the league that would make promotion even harder next year.

"It has become a bigger game if you look at the clubs that are coming up," he said.

"It would be advantageous to get out at the first attempt if we can. Not many teams achieve four promotions in four years."

Chairman feels club can grow with town's fanbase

TUNBRIDGE Wells have been challenged to unlock their potential on and off the pitch by chairman Joe Croker.

Croker who has been in his role for the last three years at the club feels it can only move forward in the future with the fan base on their doorstep in the town.

And he feels next year is the perfect time to push for promotion with the lack of a genuine favourite after Herne Bay's promotion at the weekend.

"There is no doubt we are going to push on," he said.

"I look at the results since I have been chairman, and every year we have done better in every area, our average crowd this season has been at least 150, which is 150 per cent better than a few years ago."

"We have a town of over 100,000 people and we are the senior football club, and we have got to do a lot better than we are doing with the potential that is there."

"I always say at least half the people will be interested in football, and you can go down to 2,000, or 3,000, who will actually attend games, we need them to come to us.

"There will be no dominant club in the league next year like there has been, so it's a very good opportunity for us to get promoted."

The club plays its final game of the season tomorrow at home to Canterbury City.

If they win, and Beckenham Town, who they are level on points with, lose away to champions Herne Bay, they could finish in fifth in the table.

Kent bosses safe, for now

AN era ended when Jim Ward parted company with Ramsgate last week and while he's unlikely to be the last manager in Kent to be unseated before the start of next season, there won't necessarily be too many changes elsewhere.

Several managers appear to be bombproof, like Simon Halsey at Herne Bay and while you should never assume the people in charge know what they're doing, there are a handful who will almost certainly stay put for next season - unless they decide to resign.

Judged by results alone it would be difficult for even the maddest of chairmen to remove Neil Cugley from Folkestone, Tony Burman from Dartford or Tommy Warrilow from Tonbridge and these are clubs not known for trigger-happy behaviour in the boardroom.

It wouldn't be too surprising if Liam Daish fancied a "new challenge" away from Stonebridge Road but it would be difficult to make a case for Ebbsfleet making that decision for him and the same could be said of Scott Porter at Hythe, Kevin Watson at Chatham and Ray Turner at Faversham.

The next category concerns managers who probably deserve another go but aren't necessarily certain to get it.

Jay Saunders made a sensational start at Maidstone when he took over from Andy Ford and although this season looks like ending in relative disappointment he's shown enough to deserve to be the first manager to manage the Stones in their home ground since John Still in 1988.

Nicky Forster is in the same boat at Dover, where fairly or not Martin Hayes is still copping the bulk of the blame for a stuttering campaign and the consensus seems to be that Forster deserves a season with his own squad.

The same could be said for Justin Luchford at Whitstable and although Margate have sacked Chris Kinnear before it's unlikely they'll make the same mistake twice, even after a season spent either consolidating or treading water, depending on your level of cynicism.

The only club above Kent League level where it would be a surprise if a shake-up didn't take place is Sittingbourne, who haven't won since January under either Joe Dowley or Marc Seager.

Ward's departure illustrates that even the most successful managers can run out of steam, but there's no guarantee it's the right move for either party.

When Ward was sacked by Maidstone in 2003 he seemed to have run out of ideas, and few tears were shed by Stones fans, but the following year he returned to Bourne Park with a Ramsgate side who humiliated them 5-1 on their way to successive promotions and a cup win.

Ward is now looking for a club "with ambition", and at the time of writing Canterbury City have announced they're looking for a new manager.
